It is also of interest that the then Prime Minister, the right hon. Member for Finchley, whose Ministers organised and whipped the vote, abstained in person. A fine lawyer and Whip, the hon. Member for Dorset, North (Mr. Baker) also abstained. The ex-Prime Minister, the right hon. Member for Old Bexley and Sidcup and the ex-Leader of the House, the right hon. Member for Shropshire, North voted against the motion, as did many free, non-payroll vote Ministers who were barristers, such as my hon. and learned Friends the Members for Burton and for Perth and Kinross and my hon. Friends the Members for Corby (Mr. Powell) and for Tatton (Mr. Hamilton). My hon. and learned Friend the Member for Colchester, North (Sir A. Buck), and the Chairman of the Home Affairs Select Committee voted against my punishment, as did a member of the Select Committee on Members' Interests, the hon. Member for Streatham. That was a great credit to their integrity, and I thank them now formally.

I wish to place it on the record that I attach no blame whatever to the vast bulk of hon. Members who voted for my draconian punishment. I believe that they voted in all innocence of the injustice of the Select Committee and of the deliberate perversion of justice by some of the most senior officers of state, including a Queen's counsel.

The judicial vote should have been a free vote of the House, but in effect it was along party lines. At 10pm on 7 March 1990, the House voted, but it did so along strictly party lines. The ultimate injustice was that the decision of the House on a judicial vote was done by means of a whipped vote.

Mr. Fraser: It was a free vote on this side of the House. Hon. Members voted in different ways. There were different motions from different Opposition Members. Any idea of it being a party political issue on this side of the House is utter rubbish.

Mr. Browne: I accept what the hon. Gentleman says, because he would know much more about that than me. Nevertheless, it is clear from the voting record on the first crucial vote, on the motion that I was guilty and to be punished—I am not talking about the subsequent votes—that, with one exception, the members of his party voted one way.

Two facts stand out clearly even from a cursory observation of the voting list. The first is that the House divided along party lines, perhaps not whipped in the Labour party's case. The same political bias that had been so consistently and heavily denied by the Chairman of the Select Committee in column 937 of Hansard was made clear for all to see. Secondly, Conservative Members were subjected to a payroll Whip. What is not clear, but nevertheless true, is that they were subjected to an informal Whip.

Again it is interesting to note what the Chairman of the Select Committee said in an intervention in the speech of my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Burton. He said:

"I must ask my hon. and learned Friend to bear in mind that there is no question of our punishing or convicting my hon. Friend the Member for Winchester (Mr. Browne). We did no such thing and it is for the House to decide."

The hon. Member for Wealden knew that the Whips were armed. He continued:

"My hon. Friend the Member for Winchester had every chance to produce any documents he darned well wanted to."

What about the stolen documents that were not returned? They were not mentioned. He continued:

"My hon. and learned Friend will spoil the debate".

I do not know what he meant by that, but as he is present he may tell us in his speech. He continued:

"I can speak with my hand on my heart when I say that the hon. Members for Workington (Mr. Campbell-Savours) and for Bradford, South (Mr. Cryer), whose reputations he tried to traduce a moment ago, and who were honourable members of that Committee, were totally bipartisan. No sign of political passion crept into the Committee to prejudice the case against my hon. Friend the Member for Winchester."—[Official Report, 7 March 1990; Vol. 168, c. 937.]

I should like to have conducted the House through further parts of that debate, but——

Mr. Campbell-Savours: Could the hon. Gentleman answer me another question, again: yes or no? He referred previously to divorce proceedings. Has he ever changed, modified or removed from a transcript of any legal proceedings in this country any words? Has he ever used such a transcript in any meeting anywhere in the United Kingdom?

Mr. Browne: Not that I can think of. There was however a document that was produced in my constituency on the advice of a lawyer who said that I should answer questions that had been raised in my constituency executive by not going outside the judgment of the learned High Court judge in my case, Mr. Justice Wood. So I prepared a document and took from his published judgment those items that affected just the answers to the questions that had been raised at my executive.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: Is the hon. Gentleman saying that he quoted selectively? Is he saying that he admits in the House of Commons to quoting selectively from a legal document?

Mr. Browne: No, that is not quite what I am saying at all, and the hon. Gentleman does himself no credit whatever in trying to put those words into my mouth. Various questions were raised by my executive that pertained to my divorce. I merely quoted the judge in order to answer those questions that were raised at my executive meeting. So there was selection, just as there is when any Member quotes from Hansard.

We cannot produce the whole of Hansard for every quote. It is common practice to quote. It is a matter of getting the quotes correct, which I made every attempt to do. There was one typographical error where a secretary missed out a bracket that was not all that vital. I was also criticised severely for putting round brackets instead of square brackets. My typewriter did not have square brackets, and in those days I was unaware of the huge legal significance of the difference between a round bracket and a square bracket. Otherwise, I have nothing further to say in answer to that question.

Immediately after my sentencing by the House, it was asked to vote for a motion clarifying the vague rule on foreign payments, under which I had been sentenced. The goalposts were immediately moved. The result of the vote of the House was portrayed in the media internationally as if there were something very serious and I had got a hugely serious punishment, almost like a criminal. As the hon. Member for Bolsover said, in this House a 20-day suspension is not considered vastly serious, but in the outside world it is. The problem is that judgments by the House are seen by the outside world very differently from the way in which they may be considered by hon. Members.

On the question of precedents, I should like to say that the inquiry report and my subsequent punishment by the House, with the exception of the case of the late Lord Boothby, were virtually unprecedented. The perversion of justice it involved in fixing the House vote was absolutely unprecedented. Following my punishment, all Opposition barracking over the "party of sleaze" stopped immediately. Cases were brought against other hon. Members, but, although they were found guilty, none of them was brought to the House.

Most interestingly, a case was brought against a member of the Select Committee itself—the hon. Member for Workington—and it showed the hon. Member to have deliberately and repeatedly broken a specific rule regarding the declaration of Members' interests. Surprisingly, his case was not referred to the House. Obviously, the precedent set by my punishment was not to be followed.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: Is the hon. Gentleman aware what the report to which he refers says? I do not receive and have never received moneys from the Confederation of Health Service Employees, the trade union, either for expenses or directly to me. That is accepted by the Committee. Is the hon. Gentleman aware what the report said in its conclusion? It said:

"We recognise that Mr. Campbell-Savours has never sought to conceal his sponsorship by COHSE, and that this sponsorship has always been properly registered in the Register of Members' Interests. As we have noted above, it is by no means clear that the House necessarily expects trade union sponsorship, when there is no direct payment whatever to the Member, to be declared."

That is the case in my case. How can the hon. Gentleman link that case, in which no payments were made to me, to his own case, in which he received $88,000 from the authorities in Saudi Arabia?

Mr. Browne: I have the report on the hon. Member's case in my hand. I do not have time to quote it all. However, the last lines of the recommendation of the Select Committee are:

"Since it is a specific rule that sponsorship should be registered, we believe that Mr. Campbell-Savours is technically in breach of the rule on declaration."

The Committee recommended no action. The point is that it was a technicality. Sure. My contention is that so was my case, as I said before. The payment——

Mr. Campbell-Savours: A payment of $88,000.

Mr. Browne: Right from the very beginning, when he was allegedly out for my blood before the Committee even sat, the hon. Gentleman has been quoting vast figures. These monetary amounts are not required by the Select Committee on Members' Interests in the Register. I think that they should be. I think that it should be total—either no declarations or total declarations. However, because we steer this rather grey area in the middle where, as I said at the beginning of my speech, there is this farcical situation of a financial declaration with no monetary allowance needing to be disclosed, we now have this situation.

It was said that the fee was for one little bit of work, and there has been some downgrading and attempts to make it look like a huge fee for almost nothing—which was totally false. The fact is that the hon. Member for Workington keeps mentioning this figure. Why? Because it creates more jealousy? People say, "How does this man get a huge fee for almost nothing?" Even hon. Members have said to me, "My gosh, that seems an awful lot of money, John." Jealousy was aroused among the jury sitting in this House by statements such as the hon. Gentleman has made.

As I said earlier in my speech, the technicality was that I asked the Registrar whether that payment should be registered, and he said no, because it was a payment to my company which had already been declared. It was because of the manipulation—the bending—of this rule that the Select Committee said, "Oh, but as you own 50 per cent. of the stock, you should have declared it." What did the Committee do immediately I had been sentenced? It changed the rule.

It is now clear for Members' interests that, if one owns over a certain percentage of stock in a company, all payments to those companies, declared or not, have to be declared. Now, I understand it is very clear. It was a technicality. I am not trying to insult the hon. Member for Workington: all I am saying is that he was on a technical charge as well. Why was the precedent of my case not followed? Why was a member of the Select Committee not brought back to the House, as happened in my case?

Some people have asked me why I have waited until now to raise the matter. The truth is that I have been trying to raise the matter for well over a year. My hope in explaining the case, which involved not just a great injustice but, much more importantly, a deliberate injustice, was that some right hon. Member would not only see the outrage, but be prepared to do something about it or even to speak out. I therefore tried to appeal.

I soon discovered that there was no right of appeal anywhere. This was in direct contravention of article 14 of the United Nations convention on civil and political rights of 1966. One of the most fundamental of all human rights, as I have said, is the right of natural justice to appeal. I have tried for over a year to appeal this on the grounds that I was systematically denied almost every basic human right to natural justice and that the procedures of the Select Committee itself stood in the way of justice. I do not blame the members of the Select Committee. These are the procedures. My aim with the Leader of the House today is, by showing what happened in my case, to get the procedures changed.

If an hon. Member is arraigned before a Select Committee, particularly on a matter of such seriousness affecting his whole career—so that he is virtually sitting in a court on an issue affecting his life—evidence should be taken on oath and the Committee should be equipped to take evidence on oath and to adjudicate. Those are the procedures which I am trying to get at. I am not trying to criticise the members of the Select Committee. They do not decide whether or not certain things can be done. They are part of the system. So I believe that great matters need to be corrected.

To give an example, the Select Committee denied me some of the rights that are given to all murderers and even to thieves, such as the right to call witnesses in one's defence and to have them heard and cross-examined. I do not know whether it was the wish of the Chairman of the Select Committee or whether it is the system, but the fact remains that those rights were not granted, even though they are essential to proving one's case. The defendant should be able to call witnesses and have them cross-examined by himself and by the Committee——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I have heard the hon. Member refer to those particular points on many occasions. He is now getting very close to tedious repetition.

Mr. Browne: I apologise, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I was trying to drum them home. I will get on.

I have also tried to appeal against the findings of the House on 7 March 1990 on the grounds that the decision was made as a result of a quite deliberate perversion of justice by some of the most senior and powerful officers of the Government. I tried in vain. I realise that there is no established appeal mechanism in the House of Commons, but the Government certainly have the power to bring the matter back before the House.

Surely any Government who are a signatory to the United Nations convention and are made up of men of honour would move decisively to expose wrong and to punish any deliberate abuse of justice in the treatment of an hon. Member. As I said, I believe that the House was deliberately misled when it debated and voted on the issue on 7 March 1990. Therefore, as I have said before, I do not hold the vast majority of hon. Members to blame in any way whatever.

I have said that the right of appeal is very basic. It is enshrined in clause 5 of article 15 of the UN convention. It is also enshrined in the European convention. Governments talk much about human rights, and rightly so. Our Government have signed those two conventions, but I understand that they have not signed the protocols that allow individuals to bring cases against the Government under the United Nations convention. Why not? Be that as it may, I have to accept—and I had to accept—that there was no appeal.

I believe that my case is similar to the Dreyfus case in Paris in the 1890s.

Mr. Skinner: Similar to what?

Mr. Browne: Yes, similar to the Dreyfus case. He was a captain in the French army. He was falsely charged, falsely convicted, disgraced and imprisoned for five years on Devil's Island.

Mr. Skinner rose——

Mr. Browne: I am anxious to get on.

His case was then covered up by the state, and a state cover-up is very powerful. As Anatole France said in describing the Dreyfus case:

"Some people began to recognise the injustice done, but it was supported and defended by so many open and secret powers that even the boldest hesitated. Those whose duty it was to speak up kept silent."

As no official avenue of appeal was open to me, I approached some of the most powerful Ministers, from the Prime Minister downwards, with my appeal, listing what the House has now heard. I approached some of the most influential people in the realm. My hope was that honourable people would move to correct this injustice. My hope was that they would certainly move to root out deliberate injustice, for what greater crime can there be than deliberate injustice?

Sadly, the result of my approaches was silence, in all but one case—yes, a constructive suggestion from the right hon. Member for Finchley. In the case of the Government Chief Whip, it even aroused hostility. I was even threatened. Certainly, my constituency has been put into trouble by it and has become almost a laughing stock.

Does that state silence amount to a cover-up—a cover-up so powerful that even parts of the media are silenced? Does deliberate injustice by the Government amount to corruption, and if a little corruption is accepted for the good of the party, where does it stop? Who will be next? Which right hon. or hon. Member of the House would be selected in future? For if Ministers, given charge of secret agencies such as M16 and M15, can take such blatantly discriminatory and unjust action against a loyal colleague, no citizen of this land is safe under the law.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. Gentleman is getting close to impugning the integrity and honour of other hon. Members of the House. He knows that that is not in order. The only way in which he can do that in order is by putting down a motion. Criticism is in order—even strong criticism—but he must not impugn integrity and honour.

Mr. Browne: Thank you, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I accept that ruling and I have put down early-day motion 385 to that effect.

I fought my case in the knowledge of my innocence and also the knowledge of this great and deliberate injustice and that it could happen to other right hon. or hon. Members who have outside interests. I have fought my case in the hope that the House will urgently examine and change its rules and procedures to prevent the same deliberate injustice from ever happening again.

As Clemenceau said, again in the Dreyfus case:

"The cause of human justice admits no compromise. You must be either for it or against it."

I wonder who will be the first to break the silence—the silence of the lambs.

12.42 pm

The Lord President of the Council and Leader of the House of Commons (Mr. John MacGregor): It may be for the convenience of the House if I intervene at this point.

The speech of my hon. Friend the Member for Winchester (Mr. Browne) covered three main topics affecting the House and those are the only topics on which I may comment.

The first topic is the debate on 7 March 1990, when the House considered the report from the Select Committee on Members' Interests, chaired by my hon. Friend the Member for Wealden (Sir G. Johnson Smith). The findings of the Select Committee in that report were fully covered in that debate, when a variety of different views were expressed before the House came to a clear decision on a vote. I have re-read that debate thoroughly. Certainly, a variety of views were expressed. I assure my hon. Friend the Member for Winchester that there was no whipping. It was a free vote and my hon. Friend mentioned the difference in the way that some of my hon. Friends voted.

As the House will know, and as my hon. Friend the Member for Winchester is aware—he and I have corresponded about this—there is no formal route of appeal following the decision that the House reached in March 1990, after the debate conducted in accordance with the rules of the House. The resolution that the House approved at the end of that debate is the final decision of the House.

Mr. John Browne: I find it hard to accept my right hon. Friend's statement. I know that he is an honourable man —I sincerely mean that—but he said that there was a free vote. Perhaps, on the surface, there was a free vote. Everyone in the House knows how the Whips operate, with the payroll and by applying pressures—what is called the informal vote.

Mr. Skinner: Well, we had a free vote.

Mr. Browne: Maybe, but I am talking about the Conservative side of the House. Even a Cabinet Minister came up to me and told me that he was pressurised. He actually said that he was ashamed of what he had done, but that he was ordered to do it by the Whips. He did not attend the debate, but he came in to vote because he was ordered to do so by the Chief Whip. My right hon. Friend must admit that although it was a free vote on the surface, it was very much a whipped vote, under the table, on this side of the House.

Mr. MacGregor: If my hon. Friend looks at the Division lists, he will see that my hon. Friends voted in a variety of different ways. Therefore, I think that the position is clear.

The second topic raised in my hon. Friend's speech was the procedures followed once the Select Committee has made a report following a complaint against a Member. As my hon. Friend is aware, the rules of the House are clear in relation to reports from the Select Committee. They are set out in the annex to the report of the Select Committee on Members' Interests (Declaration) of the 1974-75 Session, and summarised in "Erskine May" at page 389. It is made absolutely clear there that the final decision is for the House to take. The proceedings in respect of Select Committee reports are of long standing and perfectly well understood by the House, and I see no need for them to be re-examined.

The third topic discussed by my hon. Friend for Winchester at great length was the procedures that the House has established for the registering of Members' interests and for the investigation by the Select Committee on Members' Interests of alleged breaches of those rules. The House will recall that on 7 March 1990 the House approved a second motion requesting the Select Committee on Members' Interests to study and report further on the questions raised by its report relating to, first, the definition of outside interests and the enforcement of obligations in relation to declarations of outside interests by hon. Members and, secondly, the procedures whereby complaints may be brought before the Select Committee and whereby the Select Committee investigates such complaints; together with such other questions as might appear to it to arise therefrom.

My hon. Friend spent a considerable part of his speech today examining the procedures in front of the Select Committee and also making various recommendations on the definition of "outside interests" and the "enforcement of obligations". I am sure that my hon. Friend the Member for Wealden will have noted the comments of my hon. Friend the Member for Winchester. At present, those matters are in the hands of the Select Committee, as the House requested. I do not think that it would be right for me to discuss them in detail today before the Select Committee has produced the report as requested by the House.

The matter was fully debated in March 1990 and the points that my hon. Friend raises about future issues affecting the Select Committee are ones which the Committee is currently investigating. I believe that it is right to leave it there.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: Will the Leader of the House ask those following our debate to note how the hon. Member for Winchester (Mr. Browne) has interpreted what happened during the Divisions that evening? Is not it significant that the hon. Gentleman stated that, 10 minutes later, the House took a decision in effect to change the rules, but that was not the decision taken? The House recommended that the Select Committee should consider the rules. There is a great distinction between the way in which the hon. Gentleman presented what happened and the way in which the House made its recommendation. Will the Leader of the House allude to that fact? The speech of the hon. Gentleman, which lasted about three hours, was littered with examples of slight distortions of the facts that he believes would benefit the presentation of his case.

Mr. John Browne rose——

Mr. MacGregor: I must reply to the hon. Gentleman's point. My hon. Friend the Member for Winchester has taken a great deal of the time of the House.

It is not right for me to comment on detailed points made today. My position as Leader of the House is to deal with key issues in the motion relating to the way that the Select Committee deals with Members' interests and the procedures thereafter. I have responded to both those matters.

The hon. Member for Workington (Mr. Campbell-Savours) is right about the recommendation—I have re-read all the papers and note that the Select Committee recommended a change but that, on 7 March 1990, the House did not approve that recommendation. Instead, it asked the Select Committee to look at the wider issues to which I referred. I understand that the Select Committee is now doing that. When the Select Committee makes its report to the House, that will be the time for the House to consider the matters to decide whether changes are required.

Mr. Dennis Skinner (Bolsover): What we have heard today is a catalogue of events from a Member of the Tory party who, in the run-up to the 1987 general election, did what many Tory Members do—made money on the side. Not content with being a Member of Parliament on a salary that was then about £25,000 or £26,000 a year, he wanted to line his pockets from outside. Many people do that—about 250 Tory Members and a small handful of Opposition Members, although the number of Opposition Members who make money outside this place is thank God, decreasing.

In 1974 people in local government were told that they had to sign a register of their interests when they became councillors. We in Parliament said that that was a great idea because it would ensure that councillors discussing and voting on planning decisions had to tabulate in a register their interests and for whom they were speaking.

In our society there has always been a conflict of interests. Can you truly represent your constituents on a local authority or in Parliament and at the same time represent someone else? That is the classic question. Over the years, many people have said that they can do both jobs. They have even gone so far as to say that your need to do another job to keep up some interest. That is like me saying, "Where is the nearest pit?"—miners who come to Parliament cannot work in a pit for half a day a week, but Members who are lawyers can go off to the law courts and pick up £60,000 a year, quite apart from what they get for being in the House—if and when we see them.

The reason why his place starts at half-past two in the afternoon, except on Fridays, is so that people can make money in the City and in the law courts. They could also make money at Lloyd's, but in recent years it seems that they have not been able to open the box and pull out a lot of money all the time. They are now squealing and they want their money back. They put their bets on in that posh gambling den of Lloyd's and they have nearly always made money, but now that they are not winning they want Parliament and the taxpayer to foot the bill.

In that environment, along came the hon. Member for Winchester (Mr. Browne). He told his Tory friends that he had interests outside Parliament which were making him a lot of money on the side. When he became a Member of Parliament, I suppose that they told him that he had better declare those interests in the register which Skinner and his friends forced through the House of Commons in the early 1970s. We said that if it was right for people in local government to have a register, there should be one in Parliament, too.

That register was no big deal. We were not asking people to put in how much they made, although they ought to do that. A section of the register should record such facts. For example, the right hon. Member for Worcester (Mr. Walker) worked for two months for Maxwell Communication Corporation. He got a £300,000 pay-off when he packed in, £100,000 extra as redundancy pay for working two months, and a Mercedes for a quid. That should all have been in the register.

Along comes the smart Alick hon. Member for Winchester. Given that none of his mates on the Tory side had disclosed their interests, he decided not to do so either. He picked up £88,000 from Saudi Arabia. I have always said that that money should have ended up in the miners' fund. During the strike, the hon. Gentleman accused the miners of getting money from the middle east, while all the time he was picking it up himself.

That 88,000 quid was not disclosed, but in the run-up to the 1987 election some bright-eyed spark at The Observer called David Leigh found out about it. It was a nice juicy little piece. OK—the story could have related to any of the 250 Tory Members, and for the hon. Member for Winchester it was sad that it was him, especially as he had a bit of trouble, to which I shall not refer, with another matter.

The net result was that the voters of Winchester decided that they had someone representing them who was making a lot of money on the side, and the Tory vote slumped. It is pretty obvious that someone in Winchester Tory party would have said, "We had better do something about this." So along comes the Select Committee. Here I am paraphrasing because I am not a member of it—I do not have owt to do with Select Committees.

Mr. John Browne: The hon. Gentleman has paraphrased a lot. It was not that the voters of Winchester thought that here was a chap who was making money on the side—the article by Mr. Leigh suggested that I had done something wrong. My point was that, according to the registrar, whom I asked in 1983, I had done exactly correctly. That was the point, and that is why I issued the suit.

Mr. Skinner: So, along comes the hon. Member for Winchester and he says, "I don't like this article in The Observer, so I'll issue a writ—I'm going to stop it and I'm going to make a lot of money." After all the business of the Select Committee and the writ being issued, the case was never pursued. Like many other writs, it was issued to silence somebody. He has talked about being silenced, but he decided to silence The Observer for a convenient period, and he has never pursued the matter. If David Leigh had said something extravagant and outrageous why is it that, with all his money, the hon. Gentleman was not capable of pursuing the writ to make sure that he landed The Observer with a big, fat bill? The truth is that he did not follow it through. He blames the Select Committee for having looked into the matter, as he said earlier in his long tirade.

Mr. Browne: That is not the point. How could a suit like that possibly be pursued successfully when the Select Committee came along and said that I was not right in the way that I gave information to the Register of Members' Interests?

Mr. Skinner: When I was at school, that was known in geometry as QED. The hon. Gentleman has proved my case. He is saying that his friends in the Tory party said to him, "I'm afraid we'll have to rap you over the knuckles, John." As a result, the paper realised that it had a first-class chance of sustaining its argument. The hon. Gentleman does not realise that he has made a statement which proves that The Observer had a case because a gang of his friends in the Tory party proceeded to do what The Observer thought they ought to do. The Observer is not supposed to be a Tory paper, although I am not sure about that.

The hon. Gentleman has been whingeing this morning. He got 20 days. Somebody said to me, "What shall we do, Dennis, with this bloke who's up for trial?" Trial—I ask you! The hon. Gentleman has compared himself to Dreyfus. He has a lot of brass. According to the register, he is still making a big, fat packet on the side, as well as picking up his salary of 30,000 quid. A lot of Tories do that, but to come here and say that he has been treated like Dreyfus is worse. He may be a lot of things, but Dreyfus he is not. He got 20 days. Big deal!

My hon. Friend the Member for Edinburgh, Leith (Mr. Brown) touched the Mace.

Mr. Frank Haynes (Ashfield): He more than touched it.

Mr. Skinner: He dropped it. He tried to pick it up, but he dropped it and his case turned into a cause célèbre. My hon. Friend got kicked out of Parliament for a longer time than the hon. Member for Winchester, and he has suffered in other respects. Others have been thrown out for other reasons. My hon. Friend the Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell) got thrown out because he said that the last Prime Minister was lying. Other people get kicked out and their penalty can add up to well over 20 days, and they have not lined their pockets. They have been kicked out of Parliament because they have said things that they believed in, as a matter of principle.

The truth is that the hon. Member for Winchester has suffered at the hands of his friends. Let us put it on the record once again. The Select Committee has a Tory majority—his friends. One hon. Member who serves on the Committee has been referred to several times—my hon. Friend the Member for Workington (Mr. Campbell-Savours). The hon. Member for Winchester is trying to make us believe that my hon. Friend has twisted all the other members of the Committee—a majority of whom are Tories—round his little finger like some Machiavelli so as to do down the hon. Member for Winchester. I will believe a lot of things, but I ain't believing that.

The hon. Member for Winchester should understand what really happened. His party decided in 1987, when it saw the Tory vote in Winchester slump, that it had better get rid of him and that he would be the casualty. He may be standing against the Tory candidate at the next election.

Mr. Haynes: He is.

Mr. Skinner: Quite frankly, he should get on with it. If I see Tories falling out, I will do everything that I possibly can to help, although I will not go down and speak for the hon. Gentleman. If they are to fall out and fight one another, that is their business. We all know that the Tories have divided the working class over the years. Divide and rule is their tactic.

The hon. Member for Winchester told us this morning that he is dividing against his right hon. and hon. Friends, and that is why he has found himself in a predicament. The hon. Gentleman talked about the attendance in the Chamber when a certain private Bill was considered. He got his facts wrong. When a private Bill is considered in this place, Members have to attend. He tried to make a comparison between a private Bill involving King's Cross and another private Bill dealing with the Register of Members' Interests. Of course fewer Members turned up here for the Bill on Members' interests. We all know that it was not a private Committee.

As I see it, the hon. Gentleman has produced his manifesto for Winchester when the general election takes place. I will give him some advice. I shall not give him a great deal today, but I will tell him this: that manifesto is too long for the general election. You need a few pictures and a shorter manifesto. If you make the speech that you used this morning when you are at the guildhall at Winchester, you had better complete it much more quickly than you did today. In other words, you should get to the point. You would also be better off not reading it all out.

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Harold Walker): Order.

Mr. Skinner: I am just giving the hon. Gentleman some advice. You were not here this morning, Mr. Deputy Speaker. The hon. Gentleman went through it all and we heard it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. Member keeps saying "you" instead of "the hon. Member".

Mr. Skinner: I get your drift, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I was giving him serious advice if he is to stand against the Tory party. If that happens, the Labour candidate could slip through the middle and win the seat. That is one of the principal reasons for my involvement in the debate.

The hon. Member for Winchester should understand that this place is a gentlemen's club as well as a place for enacting legislation. I have been here for 20-odd years and I know that. I do not like the gentlemen's club part of it. I decided when I came here not to be part of it, but I knew it existed. The hon. Gentleman has been done by many of his hon. Friends who are in this club. He was not done by Labour Members. We had a free vote. The hon. Gentleman says that there was a whipped Government vote against him, and he must prove that. As I have said, we were not whipped. We did not get involved in the club. Many of my hon. Friends said, "We will not vote to send somebody out for 20 days." They did not want to vote. A hell of a lot of Members did not vote for that reason.

The hon. Member for Winchester must understand that when he came to the House he came as part of the gentlemen's club. If he wants to be involved in the camaraderie of that club, he might have to accept some of the rules. When Mr. Speaker tells me that I must leave the Chamber, I do not like it. On those occasions, I should like to appeal. I should like to say to Mr. Speaker, "Look, there are good reasons for my saying that someone is lining his pockets." But that is not possible, and I have to leave. When I pass through the doors, there is a bobby waiting waiting for me to escort me from the premises. An hon. Member who finds himself in that position is not allowed to speak in front of a camera in the Norman Shaw building. Yet the hon. Member for Winchester is whingeing because there was no appeal. In fact, he secured one, whereas I have never had one—I have never had a chance to put my case on the occasions when I have been told to have an early bath.

The hon. Gentleman should understand what the game is all about. That is all that I say to him. He has sat among those who want to make money on the side. I think that I know what is getting to his craw. It is that he has been done when many of his hon. Friends are making money. At the beginning of his speech I sat in my place thinking that he would reveal all their names. I thought that he would give us the figures that are absent from the register. I thought, "He might tell us what ex-Cabinet Ministers —who have 59 directorships between them—are getting". I thought for one fleeting moment that the hon. Gentleman would put numbers by the side of all those directorships, but he did not. Instead, he pulled back.

Here is another bit of advice for the hon. Gentleman: if he means to fight the election, he must not pull back. He will get some good copy. Not only the Winchester press but the national press as well, will be interested. Chris Moncrieff will be ringing the hon. Gentleman every morning. Think about it. Name the names—they are all in the register. The hon. Gentleman could make 20 or 30 speeches in Winchester and they could be in —I was going to say The Sun, but I think that The Sun would black them. Anyway, he could be in the Daily Mirror every morning.

I know that there is something wrong with the register. We all know that. Two or three things need doing—and we should be sharp about it. We want to know how much money is being made by all the company directors and the rest. What would be wrong with that? I would go further, but the House would not carry it. Every Member of Parliament should have only one job. I would like to see that in the Labour manifesto—not many of my hon. Friends have outside interests. It would be a good thing, and we should sweep the country. There would be no talk of hung Parliaments and the like. I would like us to say to the millions of voters that the next Labour Government will insist that when someone enters Parliament he must represent his constituents—he should have one job and one job alone. But the hon. Member for Winchester would not support that.

Mr. Browne: Yes, I do.

Mr. Skinner: If the hon. Gentleman supports the idea of one job, and one job alone for a Member of Parliament, why has he still got so many interests in the register?

The hon. Member for Winchester had a choice in the gentlemen's club, and he did not take it. A lot of hon. Members who go before the Select Committee about such matters give in. I would not do that—I would take it on the chin. If I had stood up and said something in the Chamber or outside, or if I had done something, I should stand by it, but the hon. Member for Winchester wanted to have his cake and eat it as well—he wanted to plead to the Select Committee, but he did not want to take the consequences of what he had done and said. He could have apologised at the beginning, and that probably would have been the end of the matter. But he chose to bluff it through, and the bluff did not work.

The hon. Gentleman should be a man. He should understand what happens when someone enters to the House as a Member, with all this apparatus. It may be true that he is one of many Tory Members of Parliament who are making a lot of money. He feels, "Why should I get done?" He is like the bloke who speeds up the motorway at 100 mph—the Minister of State for Defence Procurement did so twice in a fortnight, and said that he thought that the police were escorting him. One cannot say in court, "Seven other people broke the speed limit as well, Mr. Judge, or Mr. Magistrate, so why have you picked on me?" Such things happen. Some people get picked on occasionally, and they think, "Why me?" The hon. Member for Winchester should understand that he has had his chance, but he wanted everything and it did not work.

I think that the rules are wrong. They want tightening up. We want to ensure that the register is complete, and there is only one method of doing that. It is for all of us to represent our constituents, and there is an end of it. If hon. Members want to help someone they can do so and get nothing out of it. When I get up in the morning and the House does not start sitting until 2.30, I look in the papers to see if there is a strike, and I join in if it is within 20 miles of this building. That is my interest. I do not want to be paid for it. I may have to pay, to help the people who are on strike. But to think that one can make money and get away with it is another matter.

The hon. Member for Winchester has achieved one thing in raising the issue today. He has again raised the question whether the register is satisfactory. The answer is clear: it is not satisfactory. It is time to change it, and I hope that that happens in the next Parliament, after Labour sweeps to power. If the Labour Government cannot introduce the idea that one Member of Parliament should have only one job, who can? My hon. Friend the Member for Norwood (Mr. Fraser) is very sound on such matters and I ask him to convey to the next Labour Government the fact that the least we can expect is for the register to be brought up to date. Not only that—we should ensure that we know fully how much money people are making on the side in the law courts, in the City and in the board rooms. If this debate has done that, it has served a useful purpose.

1.9 pm

Sir Geoffrey Johnson Smith (Wealden): My hon. Friend the Member for Winchester (Mr. Browne) was courteous enough to give me notice that he intended to refer to me today as I am Chairman of the Select Committee on Members' Interests. Like my right hon. Friend the Leader of the House, I do not intend to reply in detail to the criticisms of that Committee.

As my hon. Friend the Member for Winchester will be aware, the Select Committee was faced in 1989 with a disagreeable and complicated task when it was required to investigate complaints made against him. Our inquiry took nine months, which was a long time. The Committee's report, and even more important, the 150 pages of oral and written evidence which were printed with it, must be seen and read as a whole. They are the basis on which the House took its decision in March 1990.

To take any particular political part or passage in isolation can only distort the overall picture. If anyone in the House or outside, having read the report and the evidence in full, were to accept the interpretation of my hon. Friend the Member for Winchester of the events in preference to the Committee's findings, I would disagree with him profoundly. I must point out that the findings were unanimous and I stand by the integrity of my colleagues on the Committee in the discharge of their duties.

As I said, I do not want to go into the details. However, there is one very important point which is a matter of justice. My hon. Friend the Member for Winchester said many times today that he was specifically denied the authority to call witnesses. That is certainly not my recollection.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: Hear, hear.

Sir Geoffrey Johnson Smith: It is obviously also not the recollection of the hon. Member for Workington (Mr. Campbell-Savours). My hon. Friend the Member for Winchester did not make any request to call witnesses either before or during his evidence. However, very much later, during our inquiry——

Mr. John Browne: Will my hon. Friend give way?

Sir Geoffrey Johnson Smith: I will finish my sentence first.

Much later, during our inquiry, my hon. Friend asked to call a former business partner. That was the only occasion. Otherwise, in the course of his evidence, that was not the case. I am afraid that I must point that out to him. Although I do not want to go into detail, that is an important point that he has made today.

Mr. Browne: I respect what my hon. Friend has said, but I asked on a number of occasions to call witnesses. I asked the registrar, I think, on at least three occasions whether I could bring three specific people to address the Committee to have them cross-examined—particularly Mr. Chattington, Mr. Merrick Denton-Thompson and the former registrar. I was told, "Certainly not." I was told that the only people who could call witnesses to the Committee were the members of the Committee themselves, and this was verified in the debate. The hon. Member for Streatham (Sir W. Shelton) said exactly that —that I was not allowed to call witnesses for cross-examination.

Sir Geoffrey Johnson Smith: I am very sorry, but I must tell my hon. Friend that he was given the chance to call witnesses. I will not go into the details about Mr. Chattington because if we go into that, we will get very involved and we will become involved in a situation in which we found ourselves so often in respect of our hearing evidence from him.

Mr. Quentin Davies (Stamford and Spalding): My hon. Friend referred to the report of his Select Committee which, of course, I read with the greatest attention before our debate two years ago. I have no doubt that he conducted the proceedings of that Committee with the great probity with which we all associate him in the House. Does he agree that that report did not reach any conclusions about the guilt or innocence of my hon. Friend the Member for Winchester (Mr. Browne)? It rejected a number of allegations against him and focused on two, on which it recommended further investigation. Those were the conclusions of the Select Committee report.

Sir Geoffrey Johnson Smith: No, that is not quite the story. In our view, not all the allegations were founded. In the course of our report, we indicated that that was the case, but in two particular instances we believed that there was a breach.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: Will the hon. Gentleman further qualify his reply to the invervention of the hon. Member for Stamford and Spalding (Mr. Davies)? Is not it true to say that we did not recommend further investigation? We recommended that the House should make a decision on the decisions that we took. The words in our report are:

"We therefore uphold the complaint."

That was a decision that we took on the basis of all the evidence before the Committee. It was then for the House to decide whether, in the light of our upholding the complaint, action should be taken.

Sir Geoffrey Johnson Smith: The hon. Gentleman is correct.

There is another aspect into which I do not intend to go in detail. It concerns the procedures which the Committee followed when investigating the case. They were the procedures which had been approved by the House in 1975 when it first instituted the Register of Members' Interests. Essentially, they are the same procedures that any Select Committee uses to establish the facts of a matter and then to come to a conclusion on the basis of those facts. At the end of the debate on my hon. Friend's case, the House gave the Committee a wide-ranging remit to review the rules of registration and declaration and the procedure for investigating complaints.

The Committee has had a lot of other business to tackle in the intervening period, but it has not neglected the remit which the House gave it. I hope that the Committee will be in a position to agree a report on those matters before Parliament is dissolved. In the meantime of course, it would be quite improper for me to anticipate the report.

When the House eventually comes to debate that report, it will be able to take into account the points made in today's debate and in the debate in March 1990. However, it would be wrong to regard that review as in any way reopening the case on which the House reached a decision nearly two years ago. If the House had considered that the alleged deficiencies in our present rules and procedures were sufficiently serious to tilt the balance of judgment in my hon. Friend's case, it could have done so. It did not do so and, as my right hon. Friend the Leader of the House has made clear, its decision cannot now be reopened.

Mr. John Fraser (Norwood): This has not been a very happy or pleasant occasion. We all know briefly the history of the matter. The hon. Member for Winchester (Mr. Browne) had a well-publicised matrimonial squabble. he was complained about by a journalist who, in the terms of the Select Committee's report, was not wholly without professional interest in the result of those matters.

The hon. Gentleman was suspended by the House for 20 days, which is not a terribly serious punishment, as my hon. Friend the Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner) has pointed out. His real complaint is that he was disowned by his party. That is a matter between him, his party and his constituency; it is not a matter for rehearsal in the House today. The hon. Gentleman was lucky in the ballot, and he has chosen a matter of personal interest rather than a subject of interest to his constituents.

We have one very clear and one slightly vague obligation in relation to our interests. When we speak in a debate, we should declare our interest where the speech touches on that subject. That is a much wider responsibility than the responsibility for declarations. I used to have a caravan at one time. I do not think that that is a declarable interest, but, if I was speaking about caravan sites—indeed, I have done so—I should declare an interest, because, although it is not something that needs to go in the Register of Members' Interests, it is clearly relevant to what I am saying.

Equally, if I have a dwelling house that is in the path of a motorway or is subject to the channel tunnel connection, although I do not have to declare my dwelling house, nevertheless if I was talking about legislation about which directly affected my interests, it is something that I should declare. That is a clear, wide and relevant declaration which we all understand.

Except on private Bills, it is fanciful to think that hon. Members actually change their vote as a result of any payment that they receive from outside. I can hardly imagine the circumstances, when it comes to voting, in which the hon. Member for Winchester will go through the Labour Lobby because there is some financial interest. Everybody would soon be on to that.

A good deal of scamming goes on here. People have received money from outside interests as consultants in their capacity of Members of Parliament. They are taking outside interests for more of a ride than they are taking the House of Commons. I cannot think of any circumstances in which hon. Members would have been paid a consultancy and would have changed their vote in the House as a result of any such payment.

Parliament does not award contracts. Parliament does not determine expenditure, except in a general sense. The real thing that matters—it is much more akin to declarations of interest for local authorities—is when one is making representations to Ministers.

It is not the House that has the mega-bucks, although we vote them; the people who can really fix the mega-bucks are Ministers and senior civil servants. That is the really important part, and that brings us to the declaration of interests. It is relevant not so much to what is said in the House or how hon. Members vote here, as to representations made to Ministers who may be placing contracts.

Mr. Tony Banks (Newham, North-West): Will my hon. Friend go further on this? There is a whole range of interests, and he has rightly mentioned some that should be declared because people should know about them. I am particularly interested in whether or not a person is a member of a masonic order and of particular lodge. Does my hon. Friend agree that that should also be a declarable interest? I am not against people being masons—that is entirely up to them—but we should know. Does my hon. Friend agree that that should be added to the register?

Mr. Fraser: I think that I am on the record as saying that that should be declarable, particularly in relation to judges. If one is a member of a masonic lodge, one should not be ashamed of saying so. People can then judge actions in the light of that fact.

I mentioned the declaration of interests first. The second is the Register of Members' Interests. In it, some matters are set out so that people know of an interest. It also saves tedious repetition. I have it in the register that I am a solicitor, so I do not have to say that on every occasion when I rise to speak. It is fairly well known.

I agree with the hon. Member for Winchester slightly, in that the criteria in the register are vague. It uses words that are subjective. One does not know quite what words such as "substantial" mean. It mentions "foreign persons", which is so wide a phrase if one does not consider it in the context of foreign Governments and foreign organisations.

Nevertheless, the real deficiency is that we do not yet have declarations. We have the declarations of the puppets, but not of the people who pull the strings. That is a deficiency. The Select Committee's recommendations for a change of practice in the registration of lobbyists and their clients who seek to influence Ministers are long overdue.

The biggest interests of all, about which most of us know, are represented largely by Tory Members. They are usually the interests of the landlord against the tenant, the brewer against the consumer, the fund manager against the investor, and the employer against the worker. Those are the truly big interests. The judgment will be made about them not here, but at the general election.

In a sense, this has been an unhappy and slightly embarrassing debate. I am afraid that the epitaph of the hon. Member for Winchester will be "public schoolboy, guards officer, banker, Member, whinger".

1.23 pm

Mr. Steve Norris (Epping Forest): In a few short moments, I wish to agree with most of those who have spoken. The motion of my hon. Friend the Member for Winchester (Mr. Browne), in so far as it refers to the inadequacy of the present system of registering Members' interests, makes a perfectly fair point. I would go further than that and agree with many of the remarks made by the hon. Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner)—about the first and last time that I shall probably say that.

Many Conservative Members recognise that the Register of Members' Interests—I have it, made up to 13 January 1992, with me—is an extraordinarily inadequate document. As with so many ill drawn up documents, it conceals more than it reveals, and by doing that we do ourselves no favours. I disagree on one point with the hon. Member for Bolsover. It is a little naive to think that every hon. Member should behave in this place as if it were a nunnery. I understand the hon. Gentleman's demonic purity of view, for which he is well known, nationally famous, and his hair-shirt philosophy. That is in contrast to the Gucci shirt worn by his hon. Friend the Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks). It is probably not Gucci, because Gucci is probably vastly out of style.

Mr. Tony Banks: It is Balmain.

Mr. Norris: The hon. Gentleman's attractive tie is infinitely more fashionable than mine. Mine is an old tie which does not seem to crease, and it was issued by the IPU.

When I return home late at night after my hard work in this place at perhaps 10.30 or 11 o'clock——

Mr. James Arbuthnot (Wanstead and Woodford): Or at 1.30 in the morning.

Mr. Norris —or indeed at 1.30 in the morning—by way of diversion I often switch on the television and see none other than the hon. Member for Newham, North-West hosting a programme, accompanied by a good friend—not my hon. Friend at this time but perhaps one day he will be a noble Lord—the putative Lord Archer of Grantchester. Between them they do very well. That role is not contained in the register, which suggests that the employment of the hon. Member for Newham, North-West is as parliamentary adviser to the Broadcasting and Entertainment Trades Alliance. I am sure that that is an oversight.

There was an oversight on my part and one that I noticed only today when I saw that the hon. Member for Copeland (Dr. Cunningham) and I both went to address a conference in the south of France in August. I did not put that on the register, largely because I was doing the job in the vacation and got paid for it. Here and now, I have written a note to the registrar putting that on the record.

Perhaps the hon. Member for Newham, North-West would like to comment. He is a good friend of mine, and I do not suggest the slightest impropriety. I am merely pointing to the unreality of the view expressed by the hon. Member for Bolsover that we should exist in a little cocoon and have no outside interests or earnings to be justified.

My right hon. Friend the Minister for Trade is a substantial grocer, although I understand that he takes no practical part in the family business. None the less, he probably benefits from it to some small degree. My right hon. Friend could do almost any job, but he has chosen to give up much of his free time to work extremely hard as a Member and an excellent Minister. It is utterly unrealistic to suggest that he should do that for the salary that a generous population affords to its Members of Parliament. That is nonsense, and does not wash.

I am perfectly happy with the concept that my good friend the Member for Newham, North-West and the future Lord Archer of Grantchester and others should earn money outside at the same time as doing an excellent job for constituents.

Mr. Tony Banks: The hon. Gentleman started his speech with a fairly amusing point about my clothes. My shirt is by Balmain and the silk tie by courtesy of the Tie Rack, which will perhaps now send me a free one—which, I suppose, I shall have to declare in the Register of Members' Interests.

The hon. Gentleman raises an interesting point, which had not occurred to me. I have three months in which to declare that programme. If the rules were more defined, no one would make a mistake. I had not thought of putting in my television appearances. I think that I will then need my own book, because there are quite a few television appearances.

Mr. Norris: The hon. Gentleman has made my point. I had not bothered to look at his entry until I noticed him sit down next to his hon. Friend the Member for Bolsover. I then took out the register, which is one of the greatest works of fiction I have even seen, and suddenly wondered where the bit about his television programme was.

I have often thought of asking the hon. Member for Newham, North-West how he got the job, because it seems to be a wonderful way in which to pass an hour in the evening once a week. I have often listened to the quality of the questions bobbing back and forth between the hon. Gentleman and Jeffrey Archer and thought that you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, I or many other hon. Members might "like a bit of that"—if I may use the vernacular. It is fair to say that I do not have one quarter of the hon. Gentleman's talent, and I am sure that the television companies are intelligent in picking him and not me.

I hope that hon. Members heard me say that, when I read the register, I noticed that the hon. Member for Copeland had mentioned that conference. I had not, and I shall have to do so. It was an error on my part. I want to make the matter clear because, although it is not significant, it is material. It was not long ago that I saw another hon. Member who had been on a tour on which I had been. I had to put that in the register, which I had previously forgotten to do.

Such matters worry me. What is this thing supposed to be? The entries of some hon. Members are so exhaustive that they are meaningless. Some almost say, "Was bought a cup of coffee by a constituent who thought that if he did so, I might vote against the Government and bring down the Commons." It is lunatic stuff. On the other hand, there are significant entries which say, "Nil." I look at those and think, "Nil on all counts? That is hardly realistic."

I list four directorships. All are unremunerated, because they are all charities. I regard the entry as significant because I should say that those are matters in which I am interested. I list a shareholding. I do not draw any money from it, but it is an interest, and hon. Members should know about it. I also list a directorship that pays me.

The solution to all this is straighforward. Without anticipating the Select Committee report, we should be far more specific about what should be in, what should not be in and why. I go along with what the hon. Member for Bolsover said on my second point. It is about time that we put numbers alongside names. The names mean nothing to me. One can open the document at any page and read fascinating names which are utterly meaningless in themselves. Some may pay an hon. Member nothing, whereas others will involve a considerable amount of an hon. Member's time which is given entirely voluntarily. Others may be worth £500 a year and others may be worth £50,000.

Am I doing wrong because, on occasions, I have had lunch with a lobbyist and have not put that in the Register of Members' Interests? He or she bought me lunch. Is that not material? The lobbyist wanted to talk to me and, presumably, to try to influence me. The hon. Member for Bolsover was right when he said that the idea that that means that I would walk through the Labour Lobby is vaguely naive. I go further. What would I achieve? It is a pointless exercise from that point of view.

Where do we start and stop? We should just say how much. The President of the United States suffers one minor indignity: his tax return is public property. I agree with the hon. Member for Bolsover that the road of disclosure is the proper road, whether at national or at local level. This country has an enviable reputation for honesty and integrity which I want us always to keep. We must put amounts by entries such as "occasional journalism".

Mr. Campbell-Savours: The hon. Gentleman is putting an interesting case which, I confess, I have opposed on the grounds of privacy. Even so, he puts it powerfully. How does he respond to the proposition that, suffice that hon. Members declare, they are entitled to some privacy? Does he also agree that a volume of money of a certain size might have varying amounts of influence, depending on which hon. Member receives that money?

Mr. Norris: The hon. Gentleman anticipates me. I underline that I am a Conservative Member and that I have on occasion had significant income other than my parliamentary salary. As the hon. Member for Newham, North-West constantly tells me—he has made me a few offers for it—I carry my mortgage around my wrist so that I may know the time. The hon. Gentleman has been saving up to buy it from me, and I have it on good authority that some of his earnings from the BBC may shortly be coming my way. I do not know whether I shall have to declare that transaction when it takes place. If I believe that it is notifiable, I shall declare it.

The hon. Member for Workington (Mr. Campbell-Savours) makes a serious intervention, and I assure him that I am deadly serious about what I am saying. On the question of privacy, one quickly realises on becoming a Member of this place that one should not have joined if one cannot take a joke. There are many things about this place that involve personal sacrifices. The media are likely to want to know a lot about one in all sorts of respects and, however uncomfortable that may be, they are entitled to do that. Part of that—because, sadly, there is always the odd rotten apple in the barrel—will have to be the sacrifice of a degree of privacy.

Before making that statement, I had to consider that it might mean my tax return becoming public propery. I hasten to add that it would be unbelievably tedious reading—that is almost the answer to the hon. Gentleman's intervention—in the same way as the register is unbelievably tedious. That sacrifice of privacy is an essential prequalification for the right to be a member of this place.

The register does not show the true worth of, for example, the free airports pass that is given to us by the British Airports Authority for our parliamentary duties. For somebody who uses it to the tune of £50-worth a year and who has earnings of say, £150,000 a year, I reckon that BAA will not get much political influence out of that. But for an hon. Member who exists on his basic parliamentary salary of £30,000 a year and who saves £1,000 a year because he uses the pass every weekend, it suddenly becomes material.

So the point about the Register and an open tax return is that it allows one the crucial ability to say that, for one hon. Member, it is derisory to suggest that his failure to declare some obscure night television programme for which he got £20 is a breach of faith with the House compared with some far greater perfidy that might be perpetrated for other amounts of cash.

Mr. Arbuthnot: I have been listening with fascination to much of what my hon. Friend has said and am wondering whether I must now disagree with him. How would he extend the principles that he has been enunciating to the spouses of hon. Members?

Mr. Norris: I have always thought that a nonsense of the register is the way in which it ignores spouses, and there have been many famous cases where that has been self-evident. I want a Committee of the House to consider closely the practicability of including a spouse's tax return with that of a Member, and also the question of how far one should go. It is illogical simply to confine the debate on additional income to spouses.

The Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office (Mr. Tristan Garel-Jones): What about children?

Mr. Norris: My right hon. Friend—whom it is a pleasure to see joining us today when he has a busy schedule guarding our interests in the Community—asks about children. If one's child were to receive some remuneration, would that not be an obvious way to divert some money?

Mr. Campbell-Savours: I agree with the hon. Gentleman and have argued endlessly much of the case that he makes about spouses. Can he give a sign of the extent to which, he feels that he has support for his proposition from his hon. Friends?

Mr. Norris: I cannot answer. The answer to that question is no.

When any hon. Member contemplates the scenario that my right hon. Friend the Member for Watford (Mr. Garel-Jones) and others have suggested to me, one simply has to decide on a cut-off point. That may be a spouse, or perhaps hon, Members will consider that an unnecessary extension. That is fine, but I would like us to debate it when there is the realistic prospect for real changes in the system. Members' interests should be understood before we make crass decisions.

Mr. Quentin Davies: Will my hon. Friend take the logic of his argument a little further? Would he go beyond spouses and say that the financial interests of the tax returns of Members' co-habitees should be declared? Or, if people are not formally living together but have separate addresses, although they are in a close relationship of one form or another—whether heterosexual or homosexual—should their partners declare their financial interests? Or does he feel that there is something special about the marriage contract and that the obligation should stop there?

Mr. Norris: My mind is reeling from contemplating the basis on which my hon. Friend has asked that question. I had not ascribed to him any of the motives that his question suggests, but I happen to know that his question is purely academic. I do not think that he is in any co-habiting arrangement, other than with his most attractive and excellent wife, on whom I commend him for his good fortune and perspicacity.

[Mr. Norris]

Members' interests are an issue that we should be talking about instead of the utter and arrant nonsense—the absence of reality—which this solemn document, the report of the Select Committee on Members' Interests, represents. The lesson of today's debate is clear. There is absolute all-party interest in the public knowing that Members of Parliament are justified in doing what they do and that they are making proper declarations.

The questions that my short speech has inspired have enthused me to take the matter further, but I must make it clear that it has nothing to do with Labour or Tory, with rich or poor, it is a matter which concerns the integrity of every Member of the House.

Mr. John Browne: I know that my hon. Friend the Member for Hyndburn (Mr. Hargreaves) wishes to have his debate, so I shall be brief.

I agree entirely with what my hon. Friend the Member for Epping Forest (Mr. Norris) has just said, especially with regard to matching numbers with names. I also agree with him on the privacy issue. Here I point out that I introduced the Protection of Privacy Bill and I believe that my hon. Friend is absolutely correct, and so I agree with every word that he says.

I agree with much of what the hon. Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner) says, but I shall take up two matters. First, he said that I should have apologised to the Select Committee——

Mr. Skinner: I did not say "should have"—I said that the hon. Gentleman "could have".

Mr. Browne: Oh, "could have"—the hon. Gentleman suggested that it might have been to my advantage to do so. I accept that the hon. Gentleman said "could have" apologised. The reason why I did not do so was that I thought that I was in the right and had nothing for which to apologise. I explained what I had done and that I thought that I was right. The Select Committee said that I was wrong—by sort of bending the rules, I think, but that is a matter of opinion. I apologised to the House in my statement once I had been shown to be wrong by the Select Committee's version of the rules.

The hon. Member for Bolsover said that my case was not like the Dreyfus case. I did not say that I was like Dreyfus, or that I received anywhere near the same punishment as Dreyfus. The point that I was trying to make about the Dreyfus case was that of the deliberate Government-inspired injustice and the Government cover-up that followed—those were the similarities to which I was drawing attention.

I disagree with a number of points made by the hon. Member for Wealden (Sir G. Johnson Smith), the Select Committee Chairman, particularly the matter of calling witnesses and the right to call witnesses. I was specifically told by the registrar on about three occasions that I was most definitely not allowed to call witnesses in front of the Committee.

Mr. Cambell-Savours: But not by the Committee.

Mr. Browne: The hon. Member for Workington (Mr. Campbell-Savours) says from a sedentary position that I was not told by the Select Committee members themselves. That is perfectly true, but as everyone knows, when dealing with Committees, all of one's advice comes from the Clerks Office and the Clerks to the Committee.

Mr. Haynes: I am listening carefully to the hon. Member for Winchester (Mr. Browne). Does he agree that there should be an extension to the declaration of interests? He is talking about a Select Committee, but does he agree that Members appointed to a Committee dealing with a Bill have a job to do? The party that is in power has the highest number of Members on the Committee. Does the hon. Gentleman agree that, once appointed to a Committee considering a Bill, Members should not sit in the Cafeteria studying the Financial Times to see how they or their constituents can line their pockets by noting the state of the City while the rest of us are in Committee working away to oppose or push through a Bill? In addition, I believe that people should apologise when they have got it wrong.

Mr. Browne: I agree with the hon. Gentleman's last point. When I was told that I had got it wrong, I apologised to the House.

On the hon. Gentleman's first point, I think that hon. Members do a good job in Committee. I do not see many hon. Members sitting in the Tea Room reading the Financial Times when they should be in Committee. I believe that the hon. Gentleman is right to say that hon. Members should work if appointed to a Committee, and I think that they do. That is not to say that I think that outside interests should be abolished. I believe that outside interests should be allowed as they encourage the system of hon. Members representing their constituents in a more informed manner.

The hon. Member for Workington correctly said that Committee Members had not told me that I could not call witnesses. But Members have to deal with briefings. I was briefed by the Clerk and, in particular, by the registrar, who was calling me up all the time. I had only three brief sessions in front of the Committee, which were action packed and we were pressurised for time. It was the registrar who told me, on three occasions that I can remember, that I was not allowed to call specific people whom I had asked to call. I urge my hon. Friend the Member for Wealden to check this vital point with the now ex-registrar who was present at the time.

Mr. Haynes: The hon. Gentleman has not answered my question. When certain Bills are being discussed in Committee, one has to be there whether one likes it or not. I am talking about important legislation going through the House. On one occasion when we had a Bill in Committee I saw with my own eyes one of the Conservative members of that Committee sitting in the Cafeteria studying the Financial Times to line his pockets. He should have been working in the Committee. Does the hon. Gentleman agree that that hon. Member should have been there working and not sitting in the Cafeteria trying to line his pockets?

Mr. Browne: The hon. Gentleman mentions a specific case and I have no idea of the details. All I can say is that, in general, I believe that hon. Members do a very good job on Committees. I do not know the specific case to which the hon. Gentleman is referring.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: Just so that the record can be absolutely straight, will the hon. Gentleman answer a simple question? Falcon company, the vehicle that the hon. Gentleman used, received $88,000 for the SAMA document and the hon. Gentleman knew that the Select Committee wanted access to it. He knew from sources within the United Kingdom that he was unable to get a copy of it. In light of the fact that he was repeatedly asked in Committee for a copy, did he approach the Saudi authorities to get a copy so that it could be provided to the Committee? Did he try to do that? I draw his attention to the fact that his reply is being given in the House of Commons.

Mr. Browne: Yes, I did. The hon. Gentleman was not here for that part of my speech when I dealt with that specific issue.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: I was up in the Gallery behind the hon. Gentleman.

Mr. Browne: I did not see the hon. Gentleman behind my back.

It was an interesting situation because the actual document, it is alleged, was stolen from my files. Mr. Leigh wrote some articles. Obviously he had read that document, or he could not have written them. I was then accused of not producing the document. The Committee's judgment seemed incredible to me when it knew that Mr. Leigh must have seen that document. So where was it? Why did not Mr. Leigh produce the document to the Select Committee?

Mr. Campbell-Savours: The hon. Gentleman has not answered my question.

Mr. Browne: I did answer—yes.

My hon. Friend the Member for Wealden avoided answering the vitally important question as to why the Select Committee refused to accept for investigation the case that I put to it about the hon. Member for Workington. If my hon. Friend reads the record of the debate, I should like him to give some reasons as to why it was not accepted.

The Leader of the House made an extremely short speech. He said that the final decision was for the House, and of course it was. I believe that it was a heavily whipped vote and that that sort of thing must be wrong in terms of justice. It is quite right and accepted to whip an ordinary vote, but it must surely be very wrong to whip a judicial vote in the House.

Mr. Norris: I am sorry to intervene as I am sure that my hon. Friend wants to bring his remarks to a close and I apologise for extending the debate. However, I want to make one thing clear. As a Conservative Back-Bench Member, not the slightest pressure was brought to bear on me either way as to how I voted. I just want to make that clear. If it was, I missed it. It must have been incredibly subtle and it must have gone right over my head. So far as I am aware, no pressure was brought to bear on any Back-Bench Member of the Conservative party. I wanted to say that for my hon. Friend's reassurance.

Mr. Browne: I do not know whether that is reassuring, but I can only go by what people have said to me in the House. Hon. Members have told me that pressure was put on them through the informal system. If one reads the Division lists, it is pretty clear that the payroll vote was whipped. Ministers have confirmed that to me, but of course my hon. Friend the Member for Epping Forest was not a Minister.

The purpose of the debate was to raise the issue of Members' interests, which is a complex one. A lot of things need to be done about it in the interests of hon. Members. I wanted to present my case as an example in which many of those issues were raised. I think that that purpose has been achieved. The debate was very disappointing in terms of the reply of the Leader of the House, but I have no wish to pursue it further. Therefore, I beg to ask leave to withdraw the motion.

Motion, by leave, withdrawn.

North-West Region

1.54 pm

Mr. Ken Hargreaves (Hyndburn): I beg to move,

That this House welcomes the successful effect that Government policies have had in the North West since 1979; draws attention to problems in the region which need to be addressed; and urges the Government to consider ways of so doing.

Unfortunately, unlike Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland, for which debates are held in Government time, the only opportunity that the House has to discuss the north-west comes when an hon. Member is successful in the ballot for private Members' motions.

In 1979, the picture of the north-west in the minds of most people was of an area where workers were constantly on strike, where local government was dominated by left-wing extremists, where the old industries that had made the country prosperous were declining and where the industrial scene was full of restrictive practices and overmanning. That was not necessarily an accurate picture of the north-west, but it was the image from which it suffered. I am pleased that my success in the ballot gives me the opportunity to consider—somewhat more briefly than I had expected—the successful effect that Government policies have had in the region since 1979 and the problems that need still to be addressed.

The north-west consists of the counties of Cumbria, Lancashire, Merseyside, Greater Manchester and Cheshire. The region has a population of 6·9 million 1 per cent. fewer than in 1981. Between 1981 and 1989, there was 15·7 per cent. growth in the number of people aged 75 or over. Some 18·1 per cent. of people are pensioners and 20 per cent. are under 16.

A glance at the football league tables shows Manchester United at the top of division 1, Blackburn Rovers at the top of division 2 and Burnley at the top of division 4. Even I would not claim that Government policies are responsible for that, but it is success in sport, especially by Liverpool and Manchester in football and the Lancashire county team in cricket, for which the region is rightly famous and of which people throughout the country are rightly aware. They are equally aware of the name of Accrington Stanley, whose tie I wear this afternoon, although not necessarily for the same reasons.

It is enormously good news for the north-west that my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has announced that the Government are to provide full backing for Manchester's bid for the Olympics in the year 2000. As Sir Arthur Gold, chairman of the British Olympic Association, said, "It is the most heartening announcement that British sport has heard since 1948." The £55 million offered by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister will pump-prime the essential investment necessary for Manchester to make a successful bid. A successful outcome to that bid would be of enormous importance to the north-west. The gains would be the north-west's largest-ever inward investment, providing 5,000 permanent jobs, and the boost that a successful bid would give to the north-west would carry the region forward for many years. I am grateful to my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister for his announcement on Wednesday and for his assurance that the bid presentation will have Government support from the highest level.

In 1989, for the first time ever, more than £1 billion was spent in the north-west by tourists. Even that amount will be increased substantially if the Olympic games are held in Manchester. Albert dock in Manchester which, thanks to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment, is now the second largest tourist attraction in Britain, with 5 million visitors a year, may well become the country's No. 1 attraction. The pride and confidence that Manchester enjoyed in the 19th century are emerging again today. Manchester's bid gives the north-west a new opportunity to lead the way.

There are equally successful stories to be told about other aspects of life in the north-west, but we seldom get the opportunity to do so and many people in the country —perhaps many in the House—will believe that another north-west success, "Coronation Street", is an accurate reflection of life in the north-west. Although it is my very favourite television programme, I have to say thankfully that life in the north-west has rather more to offer than "Coronation Street" implies.

When I was a child, a large proportion of my immediate family, friends and neighbours were employed in the cotton industry. Recession in the industry, hit everybody in the area hard, as we found to our cost. There were no massive redundancy payments for cotton workers who lost their jobs. Thankfully, the north-west is now more diversified and there is no doubt that Government policies have ensured that the north-west is in better shape to withstand this recession than it was in previous ones.

A recent survey in the North-West Business Insider concluded that the top 10 companies in the north-west were "a varied and balanced portfolio with a healthy preponderance of technologically advanced companies, belying stock images of the region as the home of sunset industries."

That is a welcome development from the position that was faced in the past. The north-west is second only to the south-east in terms of regional output. Gross domestic product was £44 billion in 1990, accounting for 10 per cent. of the United Kingdom total. The region takes second place in the United Kingdom in terms of manufacturing, which in 1989 was worth £12 billion, 13 per cent. of the United Kingdom total. That is a tribute to workers and management in the north-west.

In 1989, there were 17,000 manufacturing units in the region, an increase of 23 per cent. on the 1979 figure. The region's business stock grew by 18·6 per cent. between 1979 and 1990. There were 152,100 registered businesses at the end of 1990. In October 1991, the North-West Business Insider stated:

"For the first time in decades the region has a manufacturing sector capable of growth."

In helping that growth to come about, we are fortunate to have the Agency for Investment into North-West England, INWARD, which is supported by the Department of Trade and Industry to the tune of £990,000 this year. INWARD has secured about 4,000 jobs and nearly £200 million of investment in the north-west. Last year, it encouraged 27 companies to locate in the region, compared with 16 in 1990. The last financial year was the best ever for inward investment, with direct investment of £39·71 million creating or safeguarding 1,070 jobs.

In 1990-91, about £450 million was invested in the north-west by overseas companies, creating 3,000 jobs and safeguarding another 8,000. Between 1980 and 1991, inward investment created more than 14,000 jobs. That was a massive vote of confidence in the north-west. It is good that some of the world's top performers—Pirelli,

Siemens, Kellogg and Nabisco, along with German and Japanese banks—are showing their confidence by investing millions in the region.

I do not seek to pretend that there is not an unemployment problem and that there are not business failures. Unfortunately, there are both, and I regret the problems that they cause to those involved. I am trying to show, however, that it is far from all doom and gloom in the north-west. Occasionally, we should concentrate on the region's successes and not its failures. All too often we dwell on the bad news and fail to react to the good news.

The north-west has not escaped the effect of the worldwide recession. That would be impossible. It is pleasing, however, and worthy of note that it has not been affected as severely as other parts of the United Kingdom. Thankfully, unemployment in the region as a whole fell between June 1987 and January 1992. Confidence has remained high. A survey of manufacturing industry's intentions show that 43 per cent. of companies plan to increase capital expenditure this year. It appears that 65 per cent. said that the recession had affected capital expenditure plans only slightly or not at all. That is a far cry from the recessions that I remember when I was young. There can be no doubt that the Government's policies and initiatives have played a large part in bringing about this change.

Sixty three per cent. of the region's work force are in assisted areas. There are two city action teams in Manchester/Salford and Liverpool. There are three DTI task forces and 14 training and enterprise councils, one of the most successful of which is East Lancashire TEC, which covers my constituency. ELTEC had a budget for 1991-92 of £17·5 million and 205 local firms are members of it. There are 3,500 young people on youth training schemes, 1,200 people receiving employment training and 500 on the enterprise allowance scheme.

There are four enterprise zones, which have resulted in an increase in employment of 21,500 since they were designated. The east Lancashire zone has been especially successful despite the lack of enthusiasm of the Labour party in Hyndburn and the scorn that it poured on the idea when the zone was established.

I shall deal briefly with national health service provision in the north-west. There are three regional health authorities—Northern, North Western and Mersey. I welcome the fact that in North Western, which covers my constituency, and Mersey spending increased by 73 per cent. between 1982 and 1990—11 per cent. ahead of inflation. Last year, £1·3 billion was spent in North Western and £753·6 million in Mersey.

It sometimes appears to be forgotten that the health service is for the benefit of patients. As someone who has benefited enormously from it, I welcome the fact that in 1990, 546,818 in-patients were treated in the north-west region. That is a substantial increase over the number of patients treated 10 years earlier. There was a similar large increase in the Mersey region, where 280,000 in-patients were treated. Day cases have increased dramatically in both regions—in the north-west region they are up by a staggering 73 per cent., to 139,987.

Those may seem merely cold figures, but they represent people relieved of pain and suffering. They are living proof that we have a fine health service, despite the Labour party's continued attempts to denigrate it. Such attempts do nothing for morale in the national health service and are unacceptable, coming from a party which when in government underpaid nurses and stopped capital spending on hospitals. Fortunately, we have reversed that trend, and in the north-west region 62 building schemes, each costing more than £1 million, have been completed since 1979. Capital spending for 1991-92 was £108·4 million.

Shortage of time prevents me from speaking about the maternity unit at Accrington Victoria hospital and housing problems in Hyndburn. However, I wish to draw attention to two further problems.

The first is the proposed reorganisation of local government—a matter on which different areas within the north-west region will no doubt have different views, some irreconcilable. That is not so in north-east Lancashire, where views on what we would like to emerge from the reorganisation proposals are almost unanimous. Local authorities there are working together to press the local government commission for unitary authorities based on the existing districts.

I support that proposal, safe in the knowledge that it is what my constituents want. The borough council carried out a survey of the electors, asking them what they wanted from local government, and the result was overwhelming suport for a unitary authority based on Hyndburn. The council also consulted all the companies in Hyndburn with more than 20 employees. Of those, 84 per cent. wanted a unitary authority based on the district rather than on the county.

I welcome the response of the people of Hyndburn and the responsible attitude exhibted by all the Lancashire local authorities to local government reorganisation proposals. When those proposals were announced, I was convinced that history would repeat itself and that I would find myself fighting off a bid for Hyndburn to be taken over by Blackburn, just as I did when I was chairman of Oswaldwhistle urban district council in 1969-70, and led a campaign against being taken over by Blackburn. We did not want that then and we do not want it now. I am thankful that the leader of Blackburn council does not want it, either, but the commission may seek to impose it, and I wish to warn against that.

As a lifelong resident of east Lancashire, I know how strong are the ties that bind local communities together. We are fiercely proud of our history and civic traditions, and of our contribution to the well-being of the north-west, and of the nation. That contribution was made first through the cotton industry, which I have mentioned, and more recently through the multitude of small businesses that have grown up since the demise of cotton.

My hon. Friend the Minister for Local Government and Inner Cities stresses that the Local Government Bill aims to ensure that the new structure of local government in the north-west and elsewhere reflects the identities and interests of local communities. Only local people can be aware of what those identities and interests are. As my hon. Friend the Member for Nottingham, South (Mr. Brandon-Bravo) said in the Committee on the Local Government Bill, Members of Parliament should be careful about telling areas of the country that they do not represent and do not know well what form of local government is good for them. The commission needs to be warned, therefore, that any proposals to merge Hyndburn with any of our neighbours by drawing circles on the map will be greeted with outrage.

Local government has the potential either dramatically to improve or fatally to hinder the development of local spirit and pride. We must take the right decisions on reorganisation, and one of those must be to listen to and to accept the views of local people.

Finally, I want to refer to the problem that arises most frequently in my surgeries and in correspondence—concessionary television licences for pensioners. It is hardly surprising that that problem arises so frequently, given the percentage of old people in the north-west.

For many old people, television is their major form of entertainment. As old age comes, it is more difficult for people to get out and about and television becomes an important link with the world outside. It helps pensioners to feel less lonely and less cut off and isolated in their own homes. Television and radio—and especially television—are a vital part of a pensioner's life.

People of pensionable age, perhaps more than any other group, understand that there is no such thing as something for nothing and that previous attempts to provide a free television licence to pensioners would have meant a large rise in the licence fee for all non-pensioner households. I do not believe that they wanted that to happen. Nevertheless, there is a great deal of unhappiness about the present concessionary system.

The concessionary scheme has existed for 20 years. It was intended to benefit pensioners and disabled people living in residential homes and comparable sheltered housing by local authorities and housing associations. However, changes were made in the regulations in 1988 following the Kirklees judgment. The new regulations more clearly define the type of sheltered accommodation that would qualify in future.

The regulations came into force on 19 May 1988 and under them the qualifying accommodation had to form a group of at least four dwellings within a common and exclusive boundary to be served by a full-time or resident warden so that the accommodation could be seen to form a cohesive self-contained unit with staff at hand, just like a residential home.

The anomalies that arise from the concessionary system cause difficulties, confusion and even ill feeling. I accept that when the scheme had to be changed as a result of the Kirklees judgment the Government could have withdrawn the benefits of the scheme from those who ceased to qualify under the new regulations. They felt that that would be unfair and included provision in the 1988 regulations that preserved the right to existing beneficiaries for their lifetimes, provided that they continue to live in accommodation that qualifies under the old regulations.

Consequently, in some schemes, residents continue to enjoy the benefit of a concessionary licence even though the scheme no longer qualifies, while people who move into such schemes cannot now obtain concessions unless they have reserved rights. Therefore, neighbours in the same non-qualifying scheme may sometimes be treated differently, with existing beneficiaries enjoying a concession which newcomers cannot enjoy, even if they are older and poorer.

The whole situation is confusing for pensioners, who had great difficulty understanding the fairness of the original scheme, let alone the present situation. The present situation is unfair and it cannot be defended any longer. We should seriously consider introducing a concessionary scheme that gives equal benefit to all pensioners and is easily understood and seen to be fair. The present situation is not understood and it is not fair: £5 for some pensioners and £78 for the people next door. In Lancashire terms, that is plain daft.

The situation could be made more fair by allowing all pensioner households to pay a £5 licence or at least have a rebate of 50 per cent. on the cost of the present television licence. The loss of revenue to the BBC could be compensated for by allowing advertising on Radio 1, Radio 2 and, if necessary at some hours of the day, on BBC1.

Advertisements leap out at us when we watch sports programmes on television. Players wear shirts on which there are company names. The names of products and firms are thrust at us on advertising hoardings at sports grounds. We may as well go the whole way and allow advertising during certain periods and use the proceeds to get rid of the present anomalies in the concessionary scheme once and for all. I welcome the view of my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary that the Government should set up an inquiry into the future of the BBC after the general election. I hope that the concessionary licence scheme will form part of that inquiry.

The past 12 years have been important, not just for the north-west. People in very different societies have had to accept that the nation's fortunes are made from their own individual efforts. In the north-west we have responded: there is more self-employment and more small businesses, and that reflects a new awareness of the need to compete. The emphasis of Government policy has been on the role of individuals to try harder to compete more effectively. There is now a different attitude in the north-west, even in areas which, in the past, gave the region a bad name. There is an attitude of partnership between local business, local authorities, educationists and Government who are working together better than ever before. That is vital if we are to solve our present unemployment problems and the ones that will follow from the peace dividend in an area in which the defence industry has played such an important role.

I am optimistic about the future of the north-west and the quality of life that we enjoy—provided that we return a Conservative Government at the general election. I was born in the north-west, and I have lived all my life there. I know the people. They are the kindest and most caring people in the country. During my time in the House, I have always tried to put their interests first, even at the expense of sometimes voting against my own party. So much do I care for the people whom I represent that if my party, during a recession, introduced a minimum wage, higher taxes and higher national insurance contributions, I would refuse to stand for election at the coming general election. The Labour party's policies will decimate jobs and do untold damage in the north-west. They will hit hardest the very people whom it wants to help. During a recession, such policies are nonsense, and the people of the north-west will say so in no uncertain terms at the general election.

2.15 pm

Mr. Keith Mans (Wyre): I repeat what my hon. Friend the Member for Hyndburn (Mr. Hargreaves) said about the new attitude in the north-west toward competitiveness and the idea that the market for products in our part of the country exists beyond these shores. I commend my hon. Friend for all that he has done for industries in the north-west—knowing, as he does, so much about them.

It is striking that, in the past few years, although we have had an unfortunate recession in this country, there is no doubt that it has been less pronounced in the north-west because people in my region are rather more cautious. As a result, there is a lower incidence of debt even in respect of mortgages and business lending. That will do much for the region when the recovery comes. We can use a much stronger equity base in order to take advantage of increased demands for products made in my region.

There are undoubted problems, however. My hon. Friend mentioned the defence industries. It is useful to point out that, although we have a peace dividend, we still need to keep our defences strong. The Labour party and Liberal Democrats have failed time and again to make that point. We need a strong aviation industry based on civilian and military products. We in the north-east are dependent on military products. The Government's policy of maintaining a strong defence, rather than the huge cuts proposed by the Labour party and the Liberal Democrats, will result in a larger aviation industry in the north-west, as opposed to what would happen under a Labour Government, whether or not supported by the Liberal Democrats.

The other industry on which the north-west depends heavily is nuclear power. The Labour party and the Liberal Democrats want to phase out nuclear power, but 120,000 jobs in the north-west depend on nuclear power. Without that industry, jobs would be devastated, and there would be a spill-over effect on smaller contractors, retailers and people who depend on that inflow of funds into our region.

The Government's balanced policy on nuclear power and other forms of energy generation shows that we support the north-west. The Opposition would damage the north-west not only by the minimum wage but by their attitude to the two most important industries in our region —aviation and nuclear power. They want to damage the region's opportunities to move forward and take advantage of European and world markets for our products.

Mr. Henry McLeish (Fife, Central): I fully understand the anxieties of the hon. Member for Hyndburn (Mr. Hargreaves) as he looks forward to the next six weeks because if, as seems likely, the election is held on 9 April, the hon. Gentleman and his colleagues will have to defend an economic record in the north-west which, I am afraid, bears no relation to what the hon. Gentleman said.

Let us examine 13 years of Conservative government in the north-west and some key indicators that most parties would agree measure the competence and performance of any Government. First, between June 1979 and December 1991 unemployment in the north-west increased by 153,200. Outwith the south-east and Greater London, that is the biggest increase in unemployment of any region.

The other side of the coin is the change in employment. Outwith the west midlands, the north-west has lost 199,000 jobs. That is a staggering figure and directly confronts talk about the success of the Government economic policies during three periods of office. The disastrous trade figures announced yesterday show the change in manufacturing employment. In looking optimistically to the future, we look to the west midlands, the south-west, Scotland and the north-west, which we hope will play a major role in the regeneration of the British economy.

Sadly, between June 1979 and December 1991 the north-west lost 361,000 manufacturing jobs. That is not a small but a substantial haemorrhage of jobs at a time when not only the hon. Member for Hyndburn but Ministers have been making extravagant claims about the Government's employment record. If there is one statistic that reinforces the current crisis in manufacturing it is the one that relates to skills. Between March 1981 and March 1990 the north-west lost 11,300 apprentices. There has been a slump in jobs, a dramatic slump in manufacturing jobs, and the back of the apprenticeship programme in the north-west has been broken. That did not happen in the early part of the 1980s during the first or second Tory recession, but in the dip that we are now experiencing.

A job loss document that we produced this week shows that in the north-west 6,400 jobs have been lost in the first five weeks of 1992, the year of the single market and of major challenges throughout the world. We face threats from the Japanese and the strength of the Germans despite what the Prime Minister says, and Pacific rim countries are investing in skills and becoming commanding economies.

The statistic on which I shall finish is a statement on the Government's appalling record United Kingdom-wide, and certainly in the north-west. In January 1979, 62,300 18 to 24-year-olds were unemployed in the north-west. In January 1992, the figure was 103,253—an increase of 66 per cent. in the number of young people who are unemployed, after two recessions and a supposedly economic miracle. The sad state of affairs is shown graphically in yesterday's trade figures.

I cannot help the hon. Member for Hyndburn in his efforts to be re-elected in a few weeks' time. I sincerely hope that when the electors in the north-west go to the polls they will look at the claims being made by candidates and Ministers and will measure the gap between the rhetoric and the reality of 12 dismal and depressing years of Government economic policy. We hope that on 10 April in the north-west, and in the United Kingdom, we shall have a chance to start rebuilding the British economy.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Industry and Consumer Affairs (Mr. Edward Leigh): I am grateful to my hon. Friends the Members for Hyndburn (Mr. Hargreaves) and for Wyre (Mr. Mans) for the eloquent way in which they have dealt with how the north-west economy is progressing satisfactorily under this Government. For the sake of the hon. Member for Fife, Central (Mr. McLeish), I will put the debate in context.

In both employment and output terms, the north-west is second only to the south-east in size, having a gross domestic product of £47 billion—equivalent to 10·1 per cent. of GDP. Some 2·4 million people are employed in the region, representing 10·9 per cent. of the national total, and of those nearly 661,000 are employed in manufacturing. The latter figure is significant. Contrary to what the hon. Gentleman said, the region's manufacturing provides 27 per cent. of employment, compared with a national figure of 23 per cent. That share and its long history are why the north-west feels particularly strongly about manufacturing industry, and I understand the reasons for that.

As my hon. Friend the Member for Hyndburn recognised, there have been problems in the decline of the traditional industries, such as textiles, coal and steel, and to a lesser extent the ports. That decline is part of the natural life cycle of industries and sectors within industries. Governments cannot interfere with the natural order of such things.

I recognise that it is extremely painful for those involved in declining industries, and I know that the decline has cost many jobs. Between 1965—I hope that the hon. Gentleman will note that date—and 1989, around 400,000 jobs or 55 per cent. had gone from the manufacturing industries in the region. That is part of the steady decline that we have seen in the north-west, as throughout Europe. The once dominant textile industry, for example, which will be close to my hon. Friend's heart, is a typical example of what has happened in the north-west. Textiles now face low-cost competition from areas abroad, so we have had the multi-fibre arrangement, which is part of the general agreement on tariffs and trade, to ease the process.

We have also seen diversification of the north-west economy. With such diversification there is strength. The sectors represented range from engineering, the food industry, chemicals, the defence industries, and motor vehicles to the traditional industries to which I have referred.

The services sector provides the region with the largest body of service industry employment of any region outside the south-east. Important banking, finance, insurance and business services are provided in the region, which combine to make Manchester and Liverpool major centres of commerce, transport and education.

Despite its past decline, Liverpool remains an important port. Its performance since the abolition of the national dock labour scheme has been most encouraging. Manchester has more than 60 domestic, merchant and international banks represented there, as well as the northern stock exchange—a different picture from that presented by the hon. Gentleman. Elsewhere in the region there are important ancillary activities, including the Barclaycard centre in Liverpool and, in Chester, the headquarters of North West Securities and St. Michael Financial Services. That diversity now helps the region to ride the business cycle much better than it would have done with an over-dependence on larger, old-established industries.

It is no good the hon. Gentleman coming to the House today with the usual speech that we have heard many times from the Opposition Front Bench. The Opposition never give their answer. There was not a word in the hon. Gentleman's speech about their agenda, their plans or their policies—just the usual slogans, platitudes and criticisms. That is not surprising; the debate on manufacturing that we have had so often in the past few months has become wholly predictable.

The House need look only at the speeches of the hon. Member for Dunfermline, East (Mr. Brown) to see that. I have done an analysis of his speeches. In June he made a speech on manufacturing. It amounted to 57 paragraphs in Hansard. How many of those, do my hon. Friends think, describe his policies? Was it 20? Was it 25? [HON. MEMBERS: "No."] Was it 30? [HON. MEMBERS: "No."] Any advance on 30? [HON. MEMBERS: "No."] It was less than 30. To be precise it was just one.

What about the hon. Gentleman's next speech on manufacturing which was in October? Surely he could do better. Surely his own personal policy relevation growth rate would be——

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Harold Walker): Order. This is all very entertaining, but it seems to be of little relevance to the motion before the House.

Mr. Leigh: This is very relevant to the north-west, which is what the debate is about. We want to know what the Opposition policy means for manufacturing in the north-west. Of 51 paragraphs in Hansard, only one lonely paragraph was about Labour's policy. It was about Labour's small business scheme.

What a shame it is that the Labour party, time and again, failed to explain its policies. When Labour recently called a great conference on industry, it was going to explain its policies. Labour invited no fewer than 1,000 industralists to that conference——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. Gentleman should read the motion. He may then realise that his remarks are not very relevant.

Mr. Leigh: They are very relevant. Those industralists want to know what Labour's policies would mean to manufacturing in the north-west. Some 1,000 were invited and only 12 accepted the invitation. Manufacturers in the north-west, as in other regions, know that Labour's policies would be disastrous for manufacturing in the north-west. Let us consider Labour's minimum wage policy, its high tax policy——

It being half past Two o'clock, the debate stood adjourned.

Child Abuse Victims

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Neil Hamilton.]

2.35 pm

Mr. Julian Brazier (Canterbury): I am grateful for this opportunity to raise the important subject of Home Office guidelines on the preparation of child abuse victims for court. I am particularly pleased to see that my right hon. Friend the Minister of State, Home Department, has made it through the traffic and, at the end of a busy week, is in his place to reply to the debate. I say that not only because he is the Minister who has gone out of his way to keep his store open for his Back-Bench colleagues, but because of the particualar interest that he has taken in the subject, including being the driving force behind the one important improvement that has taken place in the area recently.

Child abuse is today close to epidemic proportions. In the last year, the number of children joining the child protection register in Kent was equivalent to 4 per cent. of the birth rate, yet all the caring agencies assure me that that almost certainly understates the scope of the problem. The statistics cover a range of what I can only describe as the most hideous tortures. Examples range from a little boy who had his arm broken in two places while his step-father forced him to have oral sex, to many cases of the gang rape of individual children as a result of a number of vice rings, and we now even have incidents of child prostitution.

My right hon. Friend has marked out for himself criminal prevention as a key area of interest, looking at ways to prevent the very young from becoming criminals. I put it to him that there is no better way of tackling that problem than by tackling the problem of child abuse. Indeed, my contacts in the teaching profession assure me that most of the difficult and rowdy children, inside and outside classrooms, either have been or are being severely abused.

There have been important advances in the wider areas, and I particularly welcome the White Paper, "Working Together". In Canterbury, partly as a result of that, the caring agencies, the police and social services, are working closely together. But in the matter with which we are concerned today—criminal prosecution for child abuse—we must face the reality that of all cases of children taken away from home where the burden of evidence suggests very serious child abuse, only a small fraction ever come to court, and in only a small fraction of those are convictions obtained.

One advance that will come into force in the autumn, as a result of the Criminal Justice Act 1991—the Pigot proposal on the admission of child video evidence—will help. The way in which children are treated in court and the lack of adequate preparation for that treatment has resulted in two unhappy circumstances. First, it is almost impossible in many cases to obtain convictions and, secondly, the treatment is so traumatic that the police are frequently unwilling to bring charges because they are not willing to submit the child to still further trauma. Either way, the villains go back into the community to continue.

The House will forgive me for reading two examples from an eye witness. The first is the case of Regina v. Etheridge et al. Allegations revolved around 10 children, who had been called into a room, one at a time, and subjected to various forms of sexual abuse by numerous adults. Often, children were forced to watch helplessly while younger brothers and sisters were sexually assaulted. It was 14 months from the date that that came to light until the court appearance. During that time, concern was expressed that the children, who were so badly damaged by the experience, needed therapy. However, as criminal proceedings were pending, it was believed that therapy might taint any evidence that the children might give. There are no guidelines on the subject, but in the past the defence has managed to have a case dismissed because children had received therapy.

The delay in getting the children to court did nothing to assist them to give credible evidence. The defence counsel successfully made an application to have indictments against the defendants severed, which meant that the children were forced to give evidence a number of times at separate trials, each with a different jury. One gave evidence at four separate trials.

Even after that time lapse, none of the children were allowed to refresh their memories from statements. Again, there are no guidelines on that, but past experience suggests that in some courts that could be counted as coaching.

One child of 12, having bravely given his evidence in chief, was cross-examined by seven defence counsels for a period of hours, for a number of days. The defence ploys used varied from wearing the witness down—like dripping water on a stone—to overt haranguing. It comes as no surprise that after a time the child was prepared to say anything to appease his inquisitors and to escape the ordeal, which can only be described as secondary abuse. He left the witness box tired, confused and feeling guilty that he had dared to speak up. The cross-examinations left him with a deep-rooted hatred of women, resulting from his treatment by one woman barrister, who implied that he had invited the abuse that he had suffered.

We should ask ourselves whether we should be so obsessed with providing justice for the accused that we are willing to submit a child victim, who had been raped by seven men, to be flayed by seven lawyers. The fact that such cross-examination was not expected by any of the children made its impact even more devastating. Yet again, any preparation for it could have resulted in the case being dismissed because of coaching.

Frequently, during cross-examination barristers use complicated language such as "Is it not true that?", which caused the young witnesses considerable confusion.

One witness had travelled from Essex to Maidstone. He was tired when he arrived and, having been mentally prepared, he was left outside the courtroom for the whole day while legal arguments were conducted. Those included whether witnesses should be allowed to give evidence on a television link. Eventually, decisions were made and the witnesses were wheeled in to give their evidence. That acted as a form of psychological pressure and made the child witnesses nervous. It left the police virtually no time to prepare the witnesses for what to expect, whether for a television appearance—in which case they would have had to explain to small children that they were not going out in the middle of "Neighbours", but on a separate video link—or for the courtroom. As a result, the children were not able to give credible evidence and several cases were dismissed. Fortunately, some children managed to go the distance, and four of the accused received substantial terms of imprisonment, but the majority went free, straight back into the community, where they are believed to be abusing children still.

I shall call the second case Regina v. X. It involves the buggery of an eight-year-old boy, who gave his evidence at best his tender years would permit. Spectators have said that initially he did very well, and was able to repeat the exact nature of the allegations against him, in spite of the imposing and formal surroundings of the court. Despite his brave performance, the case took a turn for the worse. A clever manipulation in cross-examination elicited a retraction from him. The judge then asked him if what he had said was really true, to which the boy replied, "No." The judge immediately dismissed the case without making it clear to the boy to which part of his evidence the question had referred. In fact, the little boy meant that the earlier part of his testimony, when the defence barrister had confused him, was untrue and not his main evidence.

I wish to make two points from those cases. First, even police officers tell me that being hauled over the coals by a lawyer is like being flayed alive. One can imagine what it does to a child. Of course, children must be cross-examined in the interests of justice, but I believe that it could be done better.

The second and central point which concerns me is that, throughout their preparation of children for the ordeal, the police are walking on eggshells. We are fortunate to have in the Gallery two representatives from Canterbury's excellent victim support scheme—

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Harold Walker): Order. The hon. Gentleman must not refer to people outside the Chamber.

Mr. Brazier: The police are treading on eggshells when they prepare children. Therefore, the first of my four recommendations is that I firmly believe that the Home Office should follow up its successful measures contained in the Criminal Justice Act 1991 with firm guidelines setting out to the police what they can and cannot do with child witnesses beforehand. Can they say to children, "You must tell the truth" or "You must stick to the truth even if a barrister is nasty to you"? Can they tell a child "A barrister may make false allegations against you"? Can they say, "This is your original statement", as they would say to an adult witness? The guidelines will be of value only if they have been agreed by the Lord Chancellor's Department and the Lord Chief Justice and, as a result, have been promulgated to judges.

Secondly, central to the issue is a measure which can come only from the Lord Chancellor's Department. The timing and physical arrangement of the trials are crucial, not only in terms of avoiding undue delay. If children are to be prepared properly, any changes of plan—such as whether to use a video link—should be settled well in advance. Barristers should not be allowed cynically to use points of order to delay proceedings and grind children down by making them nervous as they wait to start.

Thirdly, the balkanisation of trials must end. If a group of children produce allegations against an adult or adults, they should all be heard by the same jury so that they can assess the full weight of the evidence. We shall not obtain convictions if each one is stacked up individually, one to one, against the accused. More importantly, where a number of adults are accused of offending against the same child, surely one barrister could cross-examine the child and not one for each defendant.

Fourthly, in a helpful letter that I received yesterday and which dealt with a wide range of issues which stray beyond today's debate, my right hon. Friend the Minister of State discusses appointing an intermediary in court cases to cross-examine on a neutral basis for both parties. He rightly said that the matter was discussed on the appropriate amendments to the Criminal Justice Bill, but I should like his assurance that we are considering carefully the other countries that have experimented with that method. In the select committee in Congress, questions are put to various people by intermediaries, and I believe that there are some countries where intermediaries are also used in court.

My right hon. Friend the Minister of State is, like me, a father and his concern goes back a long way. Day after day, people walk free, unconvicted, from courts, having committed the most appalling offences. That is partly because the police do not have clear guidelines on how to prepare children for the ordeal of court cases.

An important and worthwhile element of the wider programme of crime prevention among the very young would be the promulgation of clear guidelines, agreed with the judiciary, for the preparation of child witnesses for court. I very much look forward to my right hon. Friend's reply.

Mr. Andrew Rowe (Mid-Kent) rose——

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Harold Walker): Order. Does the hon. Member have the consent of the hon. Member for Canterbury (Mr. Brazier) and the Minister? Yes.

2.48 pm

Mr. Rowe: I pay great tribute to my hon. Friend the Member for Canterbury (Mr. Brazier) for raising this important issue, which he did with his customary clarity and considerable imagination.

It is important to emphasise two matters. First, all the evidence suggests that young children cannot be expected to recall reliably events of any kind, particularly traumatic ones, after the passage of many months. Therefore, it is essential that whatever the guidelines for court cases, when young children are involved they should be given the utmost priority within the legal system so that justice can be delivered rapidly.

Secondly, I hope that in the next decade of Conservative government my right hon. Friend the Minister and his colleagues will give serious consideration to whether the current adversarial system is necessarily the best way to achieve justice when young children are involved. There is considerable evidence to suggest that a less adversarial and conflict-dominated system would be much fairer.

It is absolutely unreasonable, as my hon. Friend the Member for Canterbury has said, for young children to be expected to stand up not merely to one adult, but perhaps to seven who, for the past 30 years, have earned their living in many cases by tricking people into making admissions that they might not otherwise have made. The present system not only leads to injustice, but causes severe trauma to the children involved.

2.50 pm

The Minister of State, Home Office (Mr. John Patten): I am happy to join my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Kent (Mr. Rowe) in congratulating my hon. Friend the Member for Canterbury (Mr. Brazier) on his excellent and, in parts, very moving speech, which was forceful throughout.

I agree with my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Kent that when it comes to child witnesses or, indeed, anyone else, we need to keep our criminal justice system in good fighting form. That is one reason why my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary set up the Royal Commission on criminal justice under the chairmanship of Viscount Runciman. That commission will report in June 1993.

My hon. Friend the Member for Canterbury has submitted evidence to the royal commission and if my hon. Friend for Mid-Kent has any further thoughts along the lines that he outlined, necessarily briefly in this short debate, he should write to the noble Lord and the royal commission to make those points absolutely clear. I know that they will be glad to hear from him.

My hon. Friend the Member for Canterbury has raised an issue of the greatest importance. We must be grateful to him for bringing such tragic cases to our attention and giving us the opportunity to consider procedures in child abuse cases. When my hon. Friend entered the House, the issue of child abuse was just being brought into the daylight. When my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Kent entered the House, I do not believe that the incidence of child abuse was so noted. The scale of child abuse caught all of us by surprise in the latter part of the 1980s and the early 1990s. Before that, it was a hidden problem, and it is a good thing that it has been brought out into the open.

I have tried to address some of the issues, to which my hon. Friend the Member for Canterbury referred, in successive criminal justice legislation that has gone through the House—most notably the Criminal Justice Act 1991, which comes into full force in October.

I know that my hon. Friend the Member for Canterbury is a great campaigner for justice in child abuse cases. As I said, he has made a special submission to the royal commission on that subject. He had the courtesy to send me that submission, which is a fascinating and thought-provoking study. I recommend that any hon. Member who is interested in this subject should ask my hon. Friend for a copy. I understand that he will make one available free of charge to anyone who wants to see it.

The Government share my hon. Friend's strong personal commitment to effective action on this issue. We must all deplore the atrocious crimes perpetrated against children. Like my hon. Friend, I have a young child and I agree that we must do all that we can to ensure that such young victims can be heard by the courts so that their vile abusers may be brought to justice. However, in the interests of justice, we must make absolutely certain that the rights of the accused are not trampled on. Not everyone who is accused and brought to court is necessarily guilty or rightly accused of such crimes. I am glad that my hon. Friend, with his characteristic fairness, made that point.

I agree with my hon. Friend that, in the past, the criminal justice system has underestimated the sheer terror that a court appearance can cause to a child. The stress of criminal proceedings for children has been such that many cases were lost or were not even started because children were too frightened to face the witness box. That is why we took an important step forward in the Criminal Justice Act 1988 by permitting children to give evidence by means of a live television link from outside the court room. That was thought to be a daring innovation and many members of the Standing Committee considering the Bill raised their eyebrows. It is now thought simply to be part and parcel of what we should be doing.

How quickly things move on in that respect, as they have done in the Criminal Justice Act 1991, which carries on the programme of reform, and through implementation of the recommendations of the advisory committee on video evidence set up by the Government under the excellent chairmanship of his honour Judge Thomas Pigot, sometime Common Serjeant of the City of London. As I hinted in my opening remarks, we plan to implement this part of the Act this October, together with a number of other important supporting measures. That should mean that many of the problems facing children should, from October, no longer be there.

Perhaps the most eye-catching of the several changes in procedure that we made in the 1991 Act is the use of pre-recorded video evidence in cases of violent and sexual abuse involving child witnesses. A video of an earlier interview with a child—normally, but not always, carried out by a police officer or a social worker trained to work with children—will, in future, be allowed to stand in place of the child's main evidence. That is of fundamental and far-reaching importance.

However, it is no good having a video of a child's testimony if that testimony is to be ruled out of court as incompetent just because it has come from a child. That would be absurd and that is why his honour Judge Pigot recommended, and we adopted in the Criminal Justice Act, a change in the rules about the competence of child witnesses. We did a great international survey to find out whether children were more or less likely to lie than adults and it found that children were neither more nor less likely to lie. In effect, the 1991 Act says that courts should not presume that a child is an incompetent witness just because of his or her age. They must treat children's evidence, just like the adults' evidence, on its merits. This is an important change and should result in many more children being able to give evidence to our courts, and quite right too.

The video recording should also reduce the need for the child to recount his or her experience directly to court and this is obviously a good thing. The child should not have to relive events by telling the story many months later, and my hon. Friend rightly pointed out the delay in bringing some cases to trial. My right hon. Friend the Lord Chancellor is giving his attention to this procedure, which can have a distressing effect on the child. The existence of such a video may facilitate earlier therapy for the child and serve to encourage guilty pleas.

I hope that the video will have that latter effect. I understand that, in America, it has been found that the effect on the accused of showing such a video so that he, or much more rarely she, can prepare his defence to the allegations made by the victims has led to many cases collapsing at an early stage. Often, when the accused has seen the child retelling his or her story on the video, this has had such an impact on him that he has pleaded guilty. We should not always think that what happens in America will happen here, but that is one of the net effects of similar provisions in some states there, and one can only hope that it will happen in Kent as much as in Winconsin.

The child's account will still need to be tested by cross-examination, but that can take place from outside the court room by means of a live television link. Seeing the video before he or she gave evidence would be a most useful way of refreshing the child's memory. The Act also bans the accused from cross-examining the child in person. I have always been convinced that we should do that.

Finally, with an eye to reducing the unacceptable delays rightly castigated by my hon. Friend, the 1991 Act gives a special power to allow magistrates courts committal proceedings to be bypassed altogether and get the case into the Crown court straight away. It also places on the courts a statutory duty to avoid delay in these cases. I understand that the Department of my noble Friend the Lord Chancellor is considering how best to translate that duty into practical guidance.

These reforms are pretty major changes in the law and I think that they will have an extraordinary impact after October 1992. I believe that they herald a new deal for child witnesses and much brighter prospects for getting justice in these cases.

My hon. Friend mentioned some possible reforms that were not made by the 1991 Act. He was kind enough to acknowledge what the Government have done thus far in the past four of five years, but he wishes to press us to introduce further reforms. In particular, he favours the use of specialists to mediate questions to the child in court. A similar proposal was made when we considered the 1991 measure in Committee and I considered the proposal carefully at that stage.

I do not have a closed mind, but the counter-argument is that cross-examination works best as a dialogue between two people and that the point of cross-examination could be lost if that spontaneity were lost. It is rather like asking someone to act as an intermediary for one of the interjections of the hon. Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner). That could not be done by someone standing in between.

In addition, there is the real risk that a third party might inadvertently ask questions in a way that was prejudicial to the case, or might simply misunderstand precisely what was required. It would seem that there are three pretty good chances of something going wrong through the use of mediators. We shall continue, of course, to examine international practice. We shall not hesitate to change the law if our monitoring of the 1991 reforms shows that that is needed. The reforms will not take effect until October, and we shall have to let them run for at least a year. We shall be conducting research and close monitoring throughout to see how they are working. I would be the first to tell the House that I am sure that in due course we shall need to make changes. We are introducing new territory in terms of court practice.

As I have said, the changes in evidential procedure that we have made should make it much easier to get the child's account into court and reduce the number of times that the child is compelled to go over the whole thing again.

My hon. Friend is concerned about advocates' questions during cross-examination. Lawyers came in for some pretty tough strictures during his speech and that of my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Kent. They often do in the Chamber, though not by the lawyers who so populate some of the spaces on these green Benches. I believe that it is increasingly recognised that a good rapport with the child is vital to the successful conduct of the case. Under the new way of doing things, I do not believe that advocates will think that there is anything to be said for trying to trap the child, which they have undoubtedly tried to do in the past.

We cannot remove the right of one of a group of accused persons to defend himself separately, not least because his part in the offence might be different from that of the others. The judge has power to intervene, however, to curtail unnecessary cross-examination. I think that allowing the video in as evidence-in-chief should help, as should allowing cross-examination to take place from outside the court room by live television link.

We are drawing up guidance for practitioners, exactly as my hon. Friend wishes, on the making of new video recordings. It is aimed at those who will be involved in the investigation of child abuse. We have revised the draft code four times. It is now being double checked by some child protection teams around the country, one of which I visited, to ensure that it contains the best possible practice. It builds on the guidance previously issued to police and social workers by the Home Office.

Mr. Brazier: Will my right hon. Friend allow me to intervene?

Mr. Patten: Yes, of course. We have about two minutes.

Mr. Brazier: Will it be possible for Canterbury to have an opportunity to make an input?

Mr. Patten: Of course—I shall be delighted if my hon. Friend sends in any representations from Canterbury, where invaluable work is being done, as quickly as possible. Speed is of the essence. As I have said, guidance is being promulgated.

The second element of the package, in parallel with reviews that my right hon. and noble Friend the Lord Chancellor is carrying out, is a special joint project that my Department has set up with voluntary child care agencies, designed to provide better information and leaflets which are better targeted at child witnesses and those who care for them. Others involved in the project include the Crown prosecution service, of course. The leaflets may demystify the legal process and thereby reduce the child's anxiety and help the child in the interests of justice.

The overriding aim is to facilitate the testimony of children while keeping an individual child's needs at the centre of attention. A lot is being done—and rightly so—and I am grateful to my hon. Friend the Member for Canterbury for bringing these important issues before the House.

Question put and agreed to.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Parkhurst Prison

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will state the reasons for not implementing Judge Stephen Tumim's recommendations to install low-voltage electricity points in the cells of A and D wings at Parkhurst prison during refurbishment last August; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Work on the refurbishment of A and D wings at HM prison Parkhurst began in August 1990, ten months before Her Majesty's inspectorate of prisons made its visit, and too late to incorporate changes in the contract. I regret that, due to an oversight, my response to the report implied that the work began in August 1991. The inspectorate's recommendation will be implemented in future refurbishment work at the prison.

Data Protection Act 1984

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many certificates have been issued under section 27 of the Data Protection Act 1984.

Mrs. Rumbold: I am aware of none so far as the Home Office is concerned.

Mr. Salman Rushdie

Mr. Allason: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will now instruct the Metropolitan police to withdraw protection from Mr. Salman Rushdie.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: It is not for the Home Secretary to instruct the police on an operational policing matter.

Elections

Sir David Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidelines are issued to town and parish councils about the use of polling cards supplied by borough councils in elections and by-elections.

Mrs. Rumbold: We issue no such guidelines to town and parish councils.

Sir David Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take steps to require parish or town councils to display prominently, in more than one place, the notification of a by-election.

Mrs. Rumbold: We see no need to amend the existing requirements.

Sir David Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department by how much the expenses permitted to parliamentary candidates will rise for the 1992 general election over the amounts permitted at the general election of 1987.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend hopes to lay proposals on this matter before Parliament shortly.

Sir David Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce legislation to require parish and town councils to advertise an election or a by-election by issuing poll cards to each voter, where such poll cards are offered without a charge to the parish or town council concerned.

Mrs. Rumbold: It is for the parish council to decide whether it wishes to issue poll cards for an election or by-election when the poll is not combined with the poll at another election. We can see no reason for any change.

Sir David Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidelines he has issued for town and parish councils on the publication of notices concerning by-elections.

Mrs. Rumbold: We issue no such guidelines. The requirements for giving public notice of a casual vacancy on a town or parish council and for giving notice of a by-election are set out in sections 87(2) and 232 of the Local Government Act 1972 and in the Representation of the People Local Elections (Parishes and Communities) Rules 1986.

Children (Section 11 Funding)

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to extend section 11 funding to cover children from other than new Commonwealth countries; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: We accept the need to bring forward legislation on this point when there is a suitable opportunity.

Royal National Institute for the Deaf

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what investigations the Charity Commission is undertaking into the sale by the Royal National Institute for the Deaf of equipment available free on the NHS; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Charity Commission is not undertaking any investigation into the alleged sale by the Royal National Institute for the Deaf of equipment provided by the national health service. The commission knows of nothing to suggest that the institute has carried out any such practice. The Charity Commission has received representations about the institute's subsidiary company Sound Advantage, which is not a charity, and the commission is considering the institute's investment in that company.

Tadley Town Council

Sir David Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received concerning the conduct of the recent by-election of Tadley town council, near Basingstoke.

Mrs. Rumbold: None.

Credit Reference Agencies

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will launch an investigation into the use being made of credit reference agencies for purposes other than verification by a commercial organisation from which credit has been sought.

Mrs. Rumbold: No.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will make it his policy to introduce tighter controls over the access to information held by credit reference agencies.

Mrs. Rumbold: No.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has to increase penalties (a) for misuse of credit reference agencies and (b) for release of information by such agencies other than after strict verification of the identity and purpose of any inquirer.

Mrs. Rumbold: None.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Conference on the Human Dimension

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many requests have been made by countries involved in the CSCE process to initiate the involvement of independent experts as agreed at the Moscow conference on the human dimension; and if he will list the subject matter of the problem and the outcome.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: None. The mechanism evolved at the Moscow conference on the human dimension has not yet come into operation.

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the occasions when the United Kingdom has used the conference on the human dimension inquiry mechanisms agreed at the Vienna CSCE meeting in 1989, indicating the countries to which the inquiry was directed, the subject matter and the inquiry and the outcome.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The United Kingdom has made use of the CHD mechanism eight times. Prior to the fall of the communist regimes, the United Kingdom addressed the treatment of ethnic minorities in Bulgaria, the detention of human rights activists in Czechoslovakia—three times—and Romania—twice. The mechanism was also used to raise two family-reunion cases with the Soviet Union, which was subsequently resolved.

Additionally, the United Kingdom has been associated with 14 uses of the mechanism by the member states of the European Community acting together.

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reservations the United Kingdom entered concerning the independent expert procedure agreed at the Moscow meeting of the conference on the human dimension of the CSCE.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The United Kingdom made no reservations about the independent expert procedure, but did make an interpretative statement on the experts' access. A further interpretative statement on the use of this procedure was made jointly by Belgium, France, Spain and the United Kingdom. The text of both statements is attached to the copy of the concluding document of the Moscow conference, which is available in the Library of the House.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on the success or failure of the arms embargo on (a) Serbia and (b) Croatia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: There are widespread and disquieting press reports of breaches of the embargo. We do not so far have independent evidence to substantiate them.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 4 February, Official Report, column 117, to the hon. Member for Norfolk, North-West (Mr. Bellingham), whether he has had any success in establishing the identity and activities of the team in Yugoslavia which was reported in The Guardian on 17 January.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: No. There are various unsubstantiated reports but no clear evidence.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the criteria by which Her Majesty's Government decided to recognise the independence of Slovenia and Croatia and declined to recognise the independence of Macedonia and of Bosnia-Herzegovina.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We and our EC partners recognised Croatia and Slovenia on the basis of the report of the arbitration commission attached to Lord Carrington's conference. As for Bosnia-Herzegovina and Macedonia, there remain important matters which require further discussion among EC partners before a similar step is taken.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current position respecting the accreditation of representatives of Slovenia and Croatia to the United Kingdom; what is the position respecting United Kingdom representation in Ljubljana and Zagreb; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Governments of Slovenia and Croatia have made no approaches concerning the accreditation of diplomatic representatives. There is currently a British consulate in Zagreb, but no representation in Ljubljana.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has had discussions with representatives from Yugoslavia about the proposed referendum in Bosnia-Herzegovina on 28 February in respect of that republic's independence; what Her Majesty's Government's policy is on the issue; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We await the outcome of the referendum with interest and will discuss its implications with European Community partners before establishing a firm policy.

Iran

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current human rights situation in Iran.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: As my hon. and learned Friend the Minister of State told the House on 5 February, we remain very concerned about the human rights situation in Iran. The reports of the United Nations special representative, Mr. Galindo Pohl, following his visits to Iran in 1990, contain ample evidence to justify these concerns. A further report, following his visit last December, is due to be presented to the United Nations Commission on Human Rights in Geneva later this week. We shall study this report carefully together with the response made by the Iranian Government to the allegations contained in Mr. Pohl's earlier reports before deciding on further action.

Westminster Foundation for Democracy

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the proposed Westminster Foundation for Democracy; and what funding is being made available by his Department.

Mr. Hurd: I have consulted the political parties represented in the House about establishing an independent foundation, to be known as the Westminster Foundation for Democracy, to help strengthen political parties and other pluralist democratic institutions in emergent democracies. The proposal has been generally welcomed and the body will be established under prerogative powers once the parties have all nominated governors.

The foundation will receive £200,000 for the remainder of the financial year 1991-92, and £1 million in 1992-93.

Lebanon (Arms Sales)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the Government permitted the restart of arms sales to the Lebanon.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Sale of military equipment to Lebanon, as to other countries not covered by a specific embargo, has always been assessed on a strict case by case basis. We do not at present sell arms to Lebanon.

Kuwait

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consideration was given to the human rights situation in Kuwait, prior to completing the bilateral military agreement with Kuwait under the defence co-operation memorandum of understanding of 10 February.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We keep a close watch on human rights issues worldwide. They are important considerations in our bilateral relations with all countries and we discuss them with other Governments, including that of Kuwait, on a regular basis. There have recently been welcome improvements in Kuwait in this regard.

Cash Limits

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what changes he proposes to make in his department's diplomatic wing cash limits and running costs limits for 1991-92.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [pursuant to his reply, 6 February 1992, c. 215]: With regard to changes to this Department's diplomatic wing cash limits and running costs limits for 1991-92, the details for the running costs limit decrease on vote 1 should be by £1,781,000 from £480,241,000 to £478,460,000.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Shareholders

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many shareholders there were in the United Kingdom in 1979; and what is his estimate of the equivalent figure today.

Mr. Maples: It is estimated that in 1979 fewer than 3 million adults in Great Britain owned shares. The latest Treasury-stock exchange survey showed that in 1991 share ownership had risen to more than 11 million adults in Great Britain. Information for the United Kingdom as a whole is not available.

Home Income Plans

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what submissions he has received from the Building Societies Commission or building societies ombudsman on the subject of investment bond-related home income plans;

(2) if he has any plans to review the regulation of lending by building societies for (a) investment bond-related home income plans or (b) other lending; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what action he proposes to take over the involvement of certain building societies in providing mortgage finance for investment bond-related home income plans.

Mr. Maples: The regulation of investment business, including investment bond-related home income plans, is a matter for the Securities and Investments Board and the relevant self-governing organisations. As regards the activities of building societies, the concern of the Building Societies Commission is to promote the protection of shareholders and depositors in societies. The prudential guidance to building societies on the subject of lending risks, and the corresponding capital adequacy requirements, were reviewed by the commission in consultation with the building societies during 1990 and set out in the prudential note on this subject in March 1991. Building societies have been required since March 1990 to provide additional capital to cover the risks associated with lending on a deferred interest basis, which is a feature of some equity release schemes. The commission has also recently required building societies to clarify and document their lending policies, which will assist in the maintenance of lending standards.

Private Health Insurance

Mr. Steen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people over 60 years have been told they will not receive tax relief on private health insurance premiums because they have claimed for treatment which the Government do not consider would have been available on the national health service.

Mr. Maude: I regret that I have no figures on the incidence of individuals losing relief because of their having claimed for treatments not allowed by the regulations. It is my understanding that such instances should be very rare, because, in order to be certified as eligible for relief, a private medical insurance contract must only offer such allowable treatments.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much tax relief has been paid to the over-60s who have taken out private health insurance during each of the past two years.

Mr. Maude: The relief has not yet been running for two full years. In 1990-91 the relief cost £55 million and I anticipate the cost for 1991-92 to be £60 million.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the treatments which the over-60s cannot use without losing tax relief on their private health insurance premiums; and how many people, having claimed tax relief on their premiums, have had to repay those premiums.

Mr. Maude: Broadly speaking, no treatments are permitted unless they are already predominantly provided free under the NHS and are performed by a registered medical or dental practitioner in the United Kingdom to the insured as an in or out-patient of a private or NHS hospital. In addition general practitioner performed surgery is also permitted, as are various services such as physiotherapy or home nursing provided they form part of, or are consequent upon, an allowable treatment.

I regret that I have no figures on the number of claimants who have received unapproved benefits and who, as a consequence, have paid higher premiums because of a withdrawal of tax relief.

Government Shares

Mr. Beith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list what shares the Government hold in private sector companies and their market valuation on (a) 1 January and (b) 1 February.

Mr. Maude: The table shows the ordinary shares held by the Government in private sector companies with the market valuation of such holdings at the close of business on 1 January 1992 and 31 January 1992.

Company Debts

Mr. Beith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list debts over £100 million owed to the Government by United Kingdom private sector companies on 1 January 1992, not including debts arising from as yet unpaid tax bills.

Mr. Maples: The information requested is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Merchant Shipping

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to meet representatives of the United Kingdom merchant fleet to discuss the effect of Her Majesty's Government's policies on the future prosperity of merchant shipowners registered in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Maude: I will be meeting Michael Everard, president of the Chamber of Shipping, on 19 February.

Income Statistics

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing by what percentage the net take-home pay of a married man with two children on (a) half average earnings, (b) average earnings and (c) one and a half times average earnings has changed

(i) between 1974 and 1979, (ii) between 1979 and 1992, (iii) annually between 1974 and 1979 and (iv) annually between 1979 and 1992, giving (1) the average figure for each year between 1974 and 1979 and (2) the average figure for each year between 1979 and 1992.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 10 February 1992]: The figures requested are shown in the table.

CIVIL SERVICE

Working Methods

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service what new proposals he has for changes in working methods in the civil service.

Mr. Renton: Under the "next steps" initiative, chief executives are given personnel management and financial flexibilities to enable them to deliver targets set by Ministers. "Next steps" is providing benefits to customers, taxpayers and staff.

THE ARTS

British Library

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will retain the reading rooms and storage space at the Bloomsbury site of the British Library for the next 10 years for use by the library; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: No; it is not the intention that the British Library should continue to use the round reading room or other storage space, at the Bloomsbury site after 1996. The British museum is considering options for the use of all the space to be vacated by the Library. The return of this is eagerly awaited and central to the museum's future plans.

Library Authorities

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts how many library authorities he has visited (a) since his appointment, separately specifying those he has visited (b) in the past six months and (c) in 1992.

Mr. Renton: I have visited six library authorities since I took office. In January 1992, I visited two libraries in Wiltshire and I am planning to go to Berkshire, Newham and Buckinghamshire libraries next month.

South West Regional Arts Board

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister for the Arts what was the total budget of the South West regional arts board in each of the last three years; and what percentage of the total budget was spent in the South Hams parliamentary constituency in each of the last three years.

Mr. Renton: The information requested is as follows:

South West Arts Total Budget	£2,166,134	£2,280,090	£2,514,120
Direct expenditure in South Hams as percentage of total	1·63	1·43	1·44

PRIME MINISTER

Disability

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Prime Minister what percentage of the work force of the Cabinet Office are disabled.

The Prime Minister: The percentage of registered disabled persons employed by the Cabinet Office is 1·3 per cent. The Cabinet Office is an equal opportunities employer, and continually seeks to encourage the employment of people with disabilities.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Prime Minister what percentage of the work force of the Prime Minister's office are disabled.

The Prime Minister: None. For recruitment purposes, my office is part of the Cabinet Office which is an equal opportunities employer.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Prime Minister what discussions he has had with the Director of British Nuclear Fuels Ltd. concerning the transportation of radioactive waste for re-processing at Sellafield in Cumbria.

The Prime Minister: None.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Prime Minister what discussions he has had with the Director of British Nuclear Fuels Ltd. concerning the siting of the repository for radioactive and toxic waste at the Sellafield re-processing plant in Cumbria.

The Prime Minister: None. Proposals for developing a repository for intermediate and low-level radioactive wastes are a matter for UK Nirex Limited. The Departments of Energy and of the Environment are in contact with Nirex from time to time.

Pollution, Northern Ireland

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Prime Minister what discussions he had with the directors of industry concerning environmental pollution during his recent visit to Northern Ireland.

The Prime Minister: The subject did not arise.

Scotland

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Prime Minister what plans he has to visit Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I hope to make another visit to Scotland in the near future.

HEALTH

Hospital Eye Service

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has had regarding the feasibility of collecting information about and monitoring trends in referrals to the hospital eye service; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Other than two parliamentary questions from my hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham Edgbaston (Dame Jill Knight), on 20 December 1991 at column 356, we have received no representations.

The Department collects information on the hospital eye service through regular statistical returns. This includes data from district health authorities on the number of glasses, contact lenses and low vision aids prescribed and the number of patients attending the hospital eye service in connection with these services.

Erythropoieten Treatment

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the estimated number of patients who need erythropoieten treatment who have been refused on the ground of cost (a) nationally and (b) regionally.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not collected centrally.

Waiting Lists

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his estimate of the total number of people who have (a) been removed from national health service hospital waiting lists and (b) been placed on pending waiting lists prior to being added to waiting lists, in the last 12 months.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: If a hospital doctor decides that someone needs treatment they are either treated immediately or put on a waiting list for non-urgent treatment. In the 12 months to September 1991 nearly 2·8 million patients were admitted to hospitals from waiting lists. The names of a further 334,118 were removed from lists for other reasons, for example, because they had already been treated or no longer needed treatment.

HIV (Blood Transfusions)

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many non-haemophiliacs in England, Wales and Northern Ireland who have contracted HIV as a result of contaminated national health service blood/tissue transfers (a) remain alive, (b) have developed AIDS and remain alive and (c) developed AIDS and have since died;

(2) how many non-haemophiliacs in England, Wales and Northern Ireland have contracted HIV infection as a result of national health service transfers of (a) blood, (b) blood products and (c) tissue; and how many of each of these groups became infected before the introduction of screening of donations in October 1985.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There have been 61 reports in England, Wales and Northern Ireland of HIV infection in people who received blood in the United Kingdom. All of these reports related to the period prior to October 1985. In addition, there has been one report of HIV infection in a patient who received a tissue transfer after October 1985 from a donor who was subsequently found to be HIV positive.

The total number of infected people thought to be alive is 30.

The number of people reported with AIDS is 29, of whom 23 are known to have died.

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total number of people who received national health service transfusions of blood contaminated with the HIV virus; how many have subsequently been diagnosed HIV positive; and how many have died.

Mr. Waldegrave [pursuant to the reply, 14 November 1991, c. 656]: I have decided that the special provision already made for those with haemophilia and HIV is to be extended to those who have been infected with HIV as a result of national health service blood transfusion or tissue transfer in the United Kingdom. The payments will also apply to any of their spouses partners and children to whom their infection may have been passed on. The rates of payments are shown in the table. Similar help will be available throughout the United Kingdom.

The Government have never accepted the argument for a general scheme of no fault compensation for medical accidents, as such a scheme would be unworkable and unfair. That remains our position.

We made special provision for those with haemophilia and HIV because of their very special circumstances. It has been argued that this special provision should be extended to include those who have become infected with HIV through blood or tissue transfer within the United Kingdom. I have considered very carefully all the circumstances and the arguments which have been put to us. I have concluded that it would be right to recognise that this group, who share the tragedy of those with haemophilia in becoming infected with HIV through medical treatment within the United Kingdom, is also a very special case.

The circumstances of each infected transfusion or tissue recipient will need to be considered individually to establish that their treatment in the United Kingdom was the source of their infection.

A small expert panel is being set up to consider cases where necessary. I am pleased that Mr. Benet Hytner QC has agreed to chair this panel and I shall shortly appoint two medical assessors to assist in this work. Further detailed work needs to be done on the machinery for handling individual claims for these payments; but payments will be made as soon as possible.

Parliamentary authority for making these payments will be sought through supply estimates and the confirming Appropriation Act. On the basis of the reported cases the estimated cost could be £12 million. However, I cannot be certain about the cost, as numbers of valid claims are not known.

I share the great sympathy which is universally felt for the blood and tissue recipients who have tragically become infected through their treatment. Money cannot compensate for this, but I hope that the provision we are making will provide some measure of financial security for those affected and their families.

Table

The amounts of payments to be made to the HIV infected NHS blood and tissue transfer recipients are:

—Infant	41,500 each
—Single adult	43,500 each
—Married adult without dependant children	52,000 each
—Infected person with dependant children	80,500 each and to the infected spouses and/or children of the above:
Adult infected spouse or partner of the blood or tissue recipient	23,500 each
Infected child who is married	23,500 each
Unmarried infected child	21,500 each

These are the amounts already paid to people with HIV and haemophilia.

Tobacco

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the total amount paid by his Department to campaign against the use of tobacco products in the past year.

Mr. Dorrell: In 1991-92, the Health Education Authority, which is wholly funded for this purpose by the Department of Health, will have spent an estimated £6 million on smoking and health campaigns. In addition, health authorities mount local campaigns from within their own resources.

NHS Executive Report

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the cost of producing the national health service management executive report on the performance of the national health service in the first six months of its reform; how many copies of the report were printed; what was the cost associated therewith; who approved the cost; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: Ministers are accountable to the House for all their Department's expenditure. The estimated cost of producing, distributing and launching 35,000 copies of the booklet "NHS Reforms—The First Six Months" is £34,000.

Clinical Priorities

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what account is taken of clinical priorities in respect of the treatment of individual patients in implementing (a) the waiting list initiative and (b) the patients charter.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: It is for clinicians to decide when a patient should be admitted for treatment having regard to the individual's clinical priority. However, because we believe that no patient should wait excessively for any treatment, under the patients charter, we are introducing a two-year waiting time guarantee from 1 April. We are also investing an additional £39 million through the waiting list fund next year to ensure that everyone is treated within a reasonable time.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Companies (Trade Aid)

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which 10 companies have been the leading indirect beneficiaries of spending within the aid trade provision since its inception in 1978; and what percentage of total aid and trade provision—ATP—spending each has attracted.

Mrs. Chalker: The ATP commitments since 1978 total £1,374 million. The 10 largest aggregate commitments by lead contractor were as follows:

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Criminal Trials

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Attorney-General how many criminal cases were brought to trial in (a) the magistrates courts and (b) the Crown courts in each of the past five years; how many of them resulted in pleas of guilty; and how many which involved not guilty pleas resulted in acquittal.

The Attorney-General: Tables 1 to 3 give the information that is currently available. Table 1 shows the number of defendants proceeded against at the magistrates courts from 1986 to 1990, the latest available. The figures for the number of pleas of guilty are not separately collected. Tables 2 and 3 give the information for cases and defendants dealt with at the Crown court in the years 1987 to 1991. The information provided comes from two different sources, each using different definitions and collection mechanisms. As a consequence, the figures in tables 2 and 3 are not directly comparable with those in table 1.

Court of Appeal

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Attorney-General how many defendants in the Court of Appeal criminal division were (a) granted leave to appeal against conviction and (b) refused leave to appeal against conviction in each of the past five years; and how many cases where leave was granted resulted in the conviction being quashed.

The Attorney-General: The number of defendants granted leave to appeal against conviction in each of the past five years was:

	Number
1987	400
1988	429
1989	460
1990	561
1991	662

These figures include a small number of referrals direct to the full court by a single judge.

The numbers of defendants refused leave to appeal against conviction in each of the last five years were:

	Number
1987	964
1988	913
1989	960
1991	878

The numbers of defendants granted leave and whose conviction was quashed were:

	Numbers
1988	223
1990	256

Legal Services (Wales)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Attorney-General what further proposals he has to increase the provision of public legal services in Wales.

The Attorney-General: The Lord Chancellor has no specific proposals to increase the provision of public legal services in Wales.

Mortgage Repossessions

Mr. John P. Smith: To ask the Attorney-General how many repossession orders were made at Barry county court in favour of building societies or other lending institutions between (a) 1979 and 1989 and (b) 1990 and 1991.

The Attorney-General: The table gives the total number of mortgage possession actions entered and orders made in Barry county court for each year since 1987, the earliest year for which the information is available. These figures do not indicate how many houses have been repossessed through the courts as not all of the orders made will have resulted in the issue and execution of warrants of possession. At this stage, the 1991 figures are provisional and, therefore, liable to revision in the future.

Mortgage possession—actions entered and orders made in Barry county court

Year	Actions entered	Orders made
1987	184	127
1988	188	147
1989	170	94
1990	225	144
1991	286	225

Gulf War

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Attorney-General if he will obtain for his departmental library a copy of the report, "Needless Deaths in the Gulf War", published by Middle East Watch last November.

The Attorney-General: No. Copies of the report are already held by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and the Ministry of Defence.

Immigration

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Attorney-General what is the average period between a visitor visa application being refused in Dhaka and an appeal against refusal to grant a visitor's visa being heard before an immigration appeals tribunal in the United Kingdom.

The Attorney-General: The appeal process does not start until an appeal is lodged with the entry clearance officer at the post overseas. This is the responsibility of the appellant and it is not therefore possible to give the average sought. However, it currently takes between nine and 15 months to process an average case from the date notice of appeal is lodged to the issuing of the immigration adjudicators' determination. This depends largely on the time taken for the parties to prepare for the hearing, over which the immigration appellate authorities have no control. If leave is granted, an appeal against an adjudicator's determination to the immigration appeal tribunal takes on average between four and six months, again depending on the length of time taken for the parties to get ready for the hearing.

EMPLOYMENT

Youth Training

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give for each region, and for Great Britain as a whole, the latest results of the youth training leavers survey, showing for male and female trainees and for each separate ethnic group and for those with a disability (a) those in full time work with the same employer, (b) those in full time work with a different employer, (c) those in part time work, (d) those on a full time course at a college/training centre, (e) those on another YTS, (f) those doing something else, (g) those who were unemployed and (h) those who had obtained a vocational qualification together with (i) the number of questionnaires issued, (ii) the usable percentage response rate and (iii) the percentage of respondents who were early leavers.

Mr. Jackson: As the information requested is contained in a number of tables, I will write to the hon. Member.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the number of (a) employees in employment and (b) self-employed in the Chelmsford constituency in June 1983, June 1987 and at the latest available date.

Mr. Jackson: Latest available constituency data for the self-employed relates to the population census for 1981. Information available for employees in employment is from the periodic censuses of employment and is given in the table. No census was taken in 1983.

Employees in employment in the Chelmsford constituency

September of each year	Number of employees
1984	42,600
1989[1]	53,200

[1] Latest available.

Hexagon Community Ltd.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will visit Hexagon Community Ltd. in Liverpool in the near future to discuss the funding of the adult training programme.

Mr. Forth: Contractual and financial arrangements for adult training provision with Hexagon Community Ltd. are entirely a matter for the Merseyside training and enterprise council.

My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State and the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, my hon. Friend the Member for Wantage (Mr. Jackson) meet TEC chairmen on a regular basis to discuss the matters for which TECs are responsible.

Training Contracts

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he intends to apply the White Paper, "Proposals for Training Contracts", to private education establishments; and if he will make it his policy to recover the costs of training teachers who have already left the state sector for private schools.

Mr. Forth: The effect of the change in the law that may be made, following the planned consultation on the clarification of the law relating to the enforceability of training contracts, will be determined in any particular case by the terms of the contracts of employment drawn up between the employers and employees concerned.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Price Waterhouse Reviews

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the total cost of reviews of parts of his Department carried out by Price Waterhouse in the past year.

Mr. Redwood: This information is not readily available.

British Telecom (Prices)

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry by how much British Telecom's regulated prices have changed in real terms since 1984.

Mr. Redwood: The prices of BT's main services, controlled by the "price cap" in its licence, have fallen by around 27 per cent. in real terms since privatisation. This control covers residential and business charges for domestic and international calls, exchange line rentals and directory enquiries, which represent over half of BT's turnover.

Industry Investment

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what investment has been made in industry in the Greater London area over the past five years; what were the comparable figures in real and money terms for the five years to May 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 12 February 1992]: Information on investment in industry for the Greater London area is not readily available. The CSO publication "Regional Trends", a copy of which is held in the House of Commons Library, gives details of investment in the south-east region.

ENERGY

Privatisations

Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will give in respect of each privatisation since 1979 (a) the loss or profit of each company in the five years prior to privatisation and (b) any grants or loans made over the same period.

Mr. Wakeham: The information is as follows:

Radiation

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many people have made applications to British Nuclear Fuels Ltd. for compensation in respect of illnesses associated with exposure to radiation from 1 April 1981 to 31 March 1991 and from 1 April 1991 to 31 December 1991; and, of these, how many have been successful.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: This is a matter for British Nuclears Fuels plc.

Closed Coal Mines

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy who he proposes will carry the legal responsibilities for existing abandoned coal mine workings in his plans for the privatisation of British Coal; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: We have made clear that no decisions on the form of the privatisation of British Coal, or on the timing, will be made until after the general election.

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many abandonment plans for closed coal mines are held by his Department under the provisions of the Mining Act 1871; how many plans are missing; and how many have been obtained for coal mines closed prior to 1871.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Under the provisions of the Mines and Quarries Act 1954, plans, drawings and sections of abandoned mines are preserved by the Health and Safety Executive or by other persons under arrangements made or approved by it. The Health and Safety Executive has made arrangements for the British Coal Corporation to preserve such plans, drawings and sections in respect of coal mines. No plans are held by my Department.

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list, for each of the past 10 years for which figures are available, recorded incidents of the leakage of methane gas from closed coal mines, giving the names of the abandoned coal mines from which the gas originated, the dates of closure of the mines and details of the nature of any buildings in which methane was entrapped.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The information requested is not available.

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will bring forward proposals to require the adequate ventilation of abandoned coal mines; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I have no proposals for such action.

Electricity

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the market value of National Grid.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: At present, the market valuation of the National Grid Company could be of the order of £2 billion.

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his estimate of the number of shareholders in the 12 regional electricity companies.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: There are currently nearly 3·2 million shareholder accounts in the 12 regional electricity companies. It is likely that the majority of these accounts are held by individuals who own shares in only one company; although information on the precise number of such individuals cannot be produced from the 12 separate company registers.

Nuclear Power Stations

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will obtain for his departmental library a copy of "Decommissioning of Nuclear Power Stations", prepared by Fred Barker for the National Steering Committee of Nuclear Free Local Authorities published in January.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I understand that the Department will be receiving a copy of the report after its publication on 14 February.

Domestic Gas Prices

Mr. Arbuthnot: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how much gas prices of domestic customers have changed in real terms since 1986.

Mr. Moynihan: Gas prices to domestic customers are estimated to have fallen by 13 per cent. in real terms between 1986 and 1991.

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

National Minimum Stipend

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, as representing the Church Commissioners, if the Commissioners have any proposals to abolish the national minimum stipend.

Mr. Allison: No. It provides an important floor for stipend levels and also helps to determine pension levels.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Common Agricultural Policy

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if the Government will consider using EC funds to provide pensions to farmers and farm workers who are affected by changes in the CAP.

Mr. Curry: The EC Commission has tabled proposals that require all member states to set up an early retirement scheme linked to the amalgamation of small farms. The Community would contribute to the cost of the pensions paid to farmers and farm workers under this scheme. The proposed scheme is not relevant to the United Kingdom conditions because it is primarily aimed at amalgamating the many very small farms prevalent on some other member states, and we are arguing that it should be optional.

Set-aside Land

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the criteria on which funds are made available (a) for drainage of land and (b) for set-aside land; and whether land which is within an area with subsidised drainage can be eligible for set-aside funds.

Mr. Curry: The detailed rules and rates of payment of grant for replacement field drainage as part of an improvement plan under the farm and conservation grant scheme—F and CGS—and for set-aside schemes are set out in the relevent scheme literature, copies of which I have placed in the Library of the House. Expenditure on grants for the replacement of field drainage under the F and CGS and on set-aside payments in England in 1991 was £49,187 and £19,207,338 respectively. Land which is within an area with subsidised drainage could be set-aside provided it met the conditions for entry to the set-aside scheme.

Beam Trawling

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received in favour of the introduction of a beam trawler licence in the North sea; and what action he proposes to take in response.

Mr. Curry: The Department has received representations from one producer organisation and from the National Federation of Fishermen's Organisations. We are considering what action to take.

Agricultural Wages

Mr. Allen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which ILO convention is the basis for the establishment of the agricultural wages boards; when it expires; and if he will set out the conditions which govern the notice required to depart from the provisions of the convention.

Mr. Curry: The United Kingdom is a signatory to two Conventions of the International Labour Organisation —(ILO)—the terms of which are satisfied by the existence of the Agricultural Wages Board—AWB. The ILO conventions do not give the AWB its powers which are provided under the provisions of the Agricultural Wages Act 1948. ILO convention 99 requires signatories to create or maintain adequate machinery whereby minimum rates of wages can be fixed for agricultural workers. This convention may be denounced only within a 12-month period of 'window' which occurs every 10 years. The next such window is open from 23 August 1993 to 22 August 1994. Convention 101 requires signatories to ensure workers employed in agriculture are granted annual holiday with pay. The window for denunciation for this convention is next open from 24 July 1994 to 23 July 1995. In both cases, ILO rules lay down that a denunciation would not take effect until one year after its registration with the ILO.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the current and future role of the Agricultural Wages Board, with particular reference to its minimum wage setting functions.

Mr. Curry: The Agricultural Wages Board is set up under the provisions of the Agricultural Wages Act 1948 and is responsible for prescribing the minimum rates of pay and conditions of service within the agriculture industry. As with all similar bodies, the role of the AWB is reviewed from time to time. There are presently no plans to alter the status of the board or its minimum wage fixing responsibilities.

South West Regional Centre

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received on the siting of the new south-west regional centre of the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for St. Ives (Mr. Harris) on 14 February, Official Report, column 645.

Farmers (Regulations and Licences)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish his list of every requirement that the Ministry or the European Community places on farmers.

Mr. Gummer: The list is a working document and not intended for official publication. I have arranged for a copy to be made available in the Libraries of both Houses of Parliament.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the organisations with which he is having discussions about the regulations and licences imposed on farmers by his Ministry or the European Community; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: I am currently having discussions with the National Farmers Union about the regulations and licences imposed on farmers by my Department or the European Community. I am also having discussions with national organisations representing agricultural producers who are subject to these legislative requirements.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many cattle that have been confirmed with BSE until the end of January were born after July 1988.

Mr. Gummer: Up to the end of January, there have been 16 confirmed cases of BSE in cattle born after 18 July 1988 when the ban on feeding ruminant derived protein to ruminants was introduced. One of these, as previously announced, may have been a case of maternal transmission. Investigations are still continuing into some cases, while for others interpretation of data is incomplete, but it is already clear that most had probably received some ruminant protein largely by carry over of feed produced before the ban.

MacSharry Proposals

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has made of the manpower and resource implications for his Ministry of the implementation of the MacSharry proposals in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The manpower and resource implications of reforming the CAP will depend on detailed decisions yet to be made. The Government are arguing for changes to CAP regimes that will minimise the administrative burden for both farmers and the Government.

Organic Farming

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on his meeting with organic farmers on 5 February.

Mr. Curry: My right hon. Friend the Minister met representatives of the Soil Association and British Organic Farmers/Organic Growers Association on 5 February. Support for organic farming was discussed in the context of proposals made within the agrienvironment part of the MacSharry proposals for reform of the common agricultural policy. My right hon. Friend reiterated his view that environmental measures should be a central feature of CAP reform and that support for organic farming could make a useful contribution to the reduction of surpluses.

However, he stressed that support for organic farming was only one of many issues to be discussed in the CAP negotiations and that the eventual outcome of those negotiations is, inevitably, uncertain.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Scottish Affairs Committee

38. Mr. Hind: To ask the Lord President of the Council what plans he has for hon. Members representing constituencies in England, Wales or Northern Ireland to be appointed to the Scottish Affairs Committee; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: Since at present there is no such Committee the issue does not yet arise.

Annunciators

39. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many annunciators there are in the House; what plans he has to add to this number; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: The present annunciator system consists of about 1,500 black and white television monitors distributed throughout the parliamentary estate. In the phase 1 buildings—1 Parliament street and 1 Derby gate —modern television receivers provide both the annunciator service and a number of public service television channels, including teletext. It is expected that the existing annunciator sets in the remainder of the parliamentary estate will be replaced by early 1994, as part of the programme to instal a dual data and video network for Members, their staff and staff of the House.

Procedure

40. Mr. Butler: To ask the Lord President of the Council what comparative studies he has undertaken of parliamentary procedure in other legislatures.

Mr. MacGregor: My hon. Friend may know that during the last summer recess I paid an official visit to Australia and New Zealand where, amongst other engagements, I had discussions with the Speakers and other parliamentary leaders and officials from both the national and state legislatures.

Office Security

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Lord President of the Council what recent discussions he has had in respect of improving security in Members' offices.

Mr. MacGregor: I refer to the reply that I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Halifax (Mrs. Mahon).

Members' Allowances

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will list (a) the different expenses and administrative allowances available to hon. Members and (b) the information he has on similar financial provisions in the parliamentary assemblies of (i) the United States of America, (ii) Germany, (iii) France, (iv) Spain and (v) the European Parliament, specifying the different cash amounts in pound sterling terms, on the latest available relevant statistics.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Elderly People (Benefits)

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will launch a major and continuing publicity and information exercise aimed at the elderly to encourage them in the take-up of their rights and entitlements to benefits.

Miss Widdecombe: We have no plans for a single campaign of the kind described, but we continue to consider the particular needs of elderly people.

Recent initiatives include a new leaflet for older pensioners, linking benefits at significant life changes is being produced with the help of agencies.

Advertising campaigns supported by leaflets and posters for cold weather payments are mounted whenever and wherever severe weather conditions occur.

More general leaflets, for elderly people on low incomes and who are sick and disabled are distributed to post offices, including a leaflet on what to do when someone dies. We have also redesigned claim forms to benefit elderly people.

Agencies, such as citizens advice bureaux are kept informed through a mailing list. GPs, hospitals and clinics; day centres and homes, Age Concern; ministers of religion; chemists; libraries, also receive information.

A new leaflet, "Caring for Someone?", EB31, was issued in November 1991 for long-term sick and disabled people.

A new helpline—0253 858858—for war pensioners came into service last month, supported by a new leaflet to publicise the service.

On 2 and 9 April 1992 special BBC/DSS programmes for the elderly will be screened by "Advice Shop".

The BBC select—night-time service—will broadcast a 15-minute programme with information for carers of elderly people.

The Department will continue to give specific attention to the ongoing information needs of elderly people.

Community Care Grants

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects to reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Oldham, West of 17 January concerning high priority applications for community care grants to the Cambridge district office.

Mr. Scott: I replied to the hon. Member today.

Council Tax

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, further to the answer of 13 December by the Prime Minister, Official Report, column 553, if he will give details of the examination which has taken place into the impact upon claimants in receipt of family credit and the new disability working allowance of increasing the taper for the proposed council tax rebates to 20 per cent.; and if he will show the results of that examination.

Miss Widdecombe: The proposed council tax benefit taper of 20 per cent. needs to be considered in the context of the introduction of 100 per cent. maximum rebates. There will be no minimum contribution to the council tax and income-related benefit levels will not be adjusted, despite the fact that people will no longer be expected to make a 20 per cent. contribution to the community charge.

The effect of the higher taper on those people who receive family credit or disability working allowance, and housing benefit as well as council tax benefit, will be very small. Their marginal deduction rate will increase slightly from 96 to 97 per cent.

Source: Modelled using data drawn from the 1987-88 family expenditure surveys at 1991-92 prices and estimated benefit levels.

Single Mothers

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many representations he has received regarding officers of his Department threatening or actually cutting off income support from single mothers who refuse to name the father of their child, in advance of the operation of the Child Support Act 1991 in April.

Mr. Jack: We have received seven representations in which this allegation has been made. We take such allegations very seriously, and we have made clear at all times that, while our current policy is to encourage single mothers to co-operate with the Department in obtaining maintenance for their children, nothing must be said or done to suggest that income support can be reduced or not paid if they refuse to co-operate. Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency, shares our concern that the current procedures must be followed in all cases and is happy to investigate any case referred through to him. Steps have been taken to ensure that the correct procedures are followed, and these include sending a bulletin to all offices which sets out again how officers should deal with these sensitive matters. While it is clearly wrong to give a misleading impression to single parents about the possible consequences of not providing information, nevertheless it is right to expect single mothers to co-operate in obtaining maintenance where there is no good reason not to do so, and liable relative officers are advised to proceed in that expectation.

Pension Funds (Regulation)

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he will introduce regulations to place restrictions on the investment of the assets of occupational pension schemes in employer-related investments.

Mr. Newton: I have today laid before Parliament regulations under schedule 4 to the Social Security Act 1990 which will restrict to 5 per cent. the proportion of their resources which occupational pension schemes may invest in the sponsoring company, or any other company associated or connected with it. The regulations will come into effect on 9 March 1992.

The provision in the Act implemented a recommendation by the independent Occupational Pensions Board in its 1989 report entitled "Protecting Pensions" that self-investment should be restricted to 5 per cent.

The regulations follow a period of consultation with the board and with industry about how this objective can be achieved without causing undue difficulties for companies whose schemes already involve significant self-investment. The regulations therefore include transitional provisions which will give schemes time to reduce any existing self-investment, but which will prohibit the acquisition of any new self-investment while the 5 per cent. limit is exceeded.

Where self-investment exceeds 5 per cent. on 9 March 1992, transitional arrangements permit self-investment to continue to exceed 5 per cent., but only in the following restricted circumstances:—

- where a pension scheme has made a loan to the sponsoring employer which is current on 17 February 1992, the employer must repay the loan to the pension fund to reduce self-investment to 5 per cent. by 8 March 1994 or, if later, the earliest date on which repayment can be enforced;
- where a pension scheme has more than 5 per cent. of its assets invested in the sponsoring or associated company in the form of equity of that company listed on a recognised stock exchange, the scheme's holding must be reduced to 5 per cent. by 8 March 1994;
- where a pension scheme has more than 5 per cent. of its assets invested in the sponsoring or associated company in the form of equity traded on a second tier market of a recognised stock exchange, the scheme's holding must be reduced to 5 per cent. by 8 March 1997;
- a pension scheme may continue indefinitely to hold more than 5 per cent. of its assets in the sponsoring or associated company in the form of the equity of the company if a private company or in the form of property leased to the company. While however the self-investment exceeds 5 per cent. the pension scheme may not acquire any additional self-investment.

The self-investment restrictions do not apply to:—
—the investments of small self-administered schemes where the number of members is fewer than 12, all the members are trustees and all the members have agreed in writing to the self-investment; —individual insurance arrangements where the member agrees in writing to the insurance company investing in the member's company;
—employer-related investment held in bank or building society accounts;
—employer-related investment derived from members' additional voluntary contributions.

The regulations also impose an obligation on pension scheme trustees to disclose to scheme members, beneficiaries and trade union details of any self-investment, whether it exceeds 5 per cent., and whether, and if so how, they propose to reduce the percentage.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what consideration is being given by his Department to any changes that may now be necessary to pension fund regulation; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) on 20 December 1991 at columns 374-75 and to my hon. Friend the Member for Spelthorne (Mr. Wilshire) today.

Income Assessment

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will now consider changing the assumed level of weekly income of £1 for every £250 in savings which is taken into consideration when assessing community charge rebates and other social benefits; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, Central (Mr. Cousins) on 31 January 1992 at column 697.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

University College, Teesside

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many places will be available for students at the new University college in Teesside when it opens in September.

Mr. Alan Howarth: I understand from the university of Durham and Teesside polytechnic, the institutions managing the admissions to the college, that about 240 places will be available for students in the next academic year, increasing to 1,000 within five years.

Speech Therapy

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what money has been allocated to local education authorities to enable them to fulfil their duty in relation to children who have a statemented need for speech therapy.

Mr. Fallon: The local authority grant settlement for English local education authorities for 1992-93 took account of the broad range of pressures facing them and the increase of 7·1 per cent. should enable them to meet all the duties placed upon them in respect of pupils whose statements of special educational needs specify speech therapy as special educational provision.

Warwickshire

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he or his officials will meet senior education officers of Warwickshire to discuss the educational situation in that county.

Mr. Fallon: Officials at the Department are always ready to meet officers of Warwickshire education authority to discuss issues of concern to them.

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what assessment he has made of the standard of education and the maintenance of school infrastructure in Warwickshire.

Mr. Fallon: My right hon. and learned Friend does not make assessments of the quality of education, or of the standards of school maintenance, in any particular education authority area. Statistics on levels of achievement in public examinations in different local education authorities are, however, kept by the Department and are publicly available. Reports by Her Majesty's inspectorate on individual schools are also published. The Education (Schools) Bill currently before Parliament will ensure that all schools in Warwickshire are regularly inspected on a four-year cycle with published reports of each inspection.

Special Needs

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the amount allocated to each local education authority for expenditure on special educational needs provision for each year since 1985, at constant prices.

Mr. Fallon: The schools component of standard spending assessments—SSAs—does not separately identify an element for special educational needs. However it does include an allowance, equivalent to about 20 per cent. of standard spending for schools, for the additional cost of educating pupils in areas of relative deprivation which is distributed according to an index of additional educational needs. Authorities are not bound by SSAs, but are free to make their own decisions about total spending on education and the distribution of funding between the schools sectors. The amount of spending on special educational needs provision within mainstream schools with delegated budgets is a matter for the governors of those schools.

Pupil Testing

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish a table showing for each local authority in England the proportion of its primary schools, and relevant age of pupils, which were included in its return to his Department and his aggregate results of the 1991 key stage 1 tests.

Mr. Eggar: A table showing for each local authority in England the proportion of primary schools used to compile the aggregate results of the 1991 key stage 1 tests, published on 19 December, was provided in a written answer to the hon. Member for Newham, South (Mr. Spearing) on 15 January, Official Report, columns 580-82.

The following table shows what proportion of the total cohort of pupils eligible for testing in each LEA is represented by the pupils tested in these schools. There is no information about the precise distribution of the ages of pupils tested in each LEA, although all pupils tested completed key stage 1 of the national curriculum in the core subjects in the 1990-91 school year.

Music

Dr. Hampson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what consideration he gave to the curriculum requirements for music in Wales and Scotland when drawing up his plans for England.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend based his draft order for music in the national curriculum for pupils aged five to 14 on the advice of the National Curriculum Council, the statutory body which advises him on curriculum matters in respect of schools in England. The music curriculum for schools in Wales and Scotland is a matter for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales and for Scotland in the light of advice from their respective curriculum councils.

Dr. Hampson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what assessment he has made of the impact his proposed curriculum requirements for teaching music in England will have on the structure of the GCSE; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The draft order on the music curriculum which is currently out for consultation covers five to 14-year-olds only. The implications of the final order for GCSEs in music will be considered by the School Assessment and Examinations Council, in consultation with the National Curriculum Council, when they come to revise the criteria for new GCSE syllabuses for first examination in 1996.

Research Expenditure

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the current level of research expenditure for the Universities Funding Council; and what is the projected expenditure for the next three years.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The Universities Funding Council allocated £680 million on research-based criteria to universities in academic year 1991-92. This sum was not hypothecated for research. The council has allowed each institution to determine its own spending on teaching and research within the aggregate funds available to it from all sources. The level of funding is determined on an annual basis. The UFC's allocation for 1992-93 announced today represents an underlying increase of over 11 per cent. above the level for 1991-92.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what has been the budget for research of the Universities Funding Council and its predecessor body in real and constant price terms since 1979.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Neither the Universities Funding Council—UFC—nor its predecessor, the University Grants Committee—UGC—has hypothecated funding for research. Each institution has been free to determine its own spending on teaching and research within the aggregate funds available to it from all sources. Estimates of UFC-funded spending on research are set out in the "Annual Review of Government Funded Research and Development", copies of which are in the Library. Estimated spending on scientific research funded by the UGC and UFC respectively increased by 9 per cent in real terms between 1979-80 and 1989-90.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what has been the budget in real and constant price terms of each of the research councils since 1979.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Details of the grants in aid to the research councils since 1979-80 from this Department, in both cash terms and at 1992-93 prices are as follows.

Teachers' Pay

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will state the allocation among local education authorities of the extra funding for teachers' pay which was recently announced;

(2) what is the projected cost of the teachers' pay award in each local education authority; and what is the cost above the standard cost uplift implied by the revenue support grant settlement.

Mr. Fallon: The Government's proposal to implement the recommendations of the school teachers review body will add an estimated 7·8 per cent. to the teachers' pay bill of local education authorities in England and Wales in 1992-93. The pay bill of LEAs in inner and outer London and some authorities in the south-east will go up by slightly more than the average because of the additional cost of the review body's recommendations on non-discretionary London allowances. In order to help local authorities to cover the cost of the award the Government propose to pay additional grant to authorities in England and Wales totalling £60 million. The £60 million broadly represents the difference between the cost of an award consistent with the overall uplift in education standard spending allowed in the 1992-93 RSG settlements for England and Wales—7·2 per cent.—and the actual cost of the award—7·8 per cent. England's share of the £60 million is £56·5 million. The Government propose that, subject to the House of Commons approval, the additional grant in England should be distributed to local education authorities on the basis of the schools elements of their standard spending assessments. Illustrative allocations to individual LEAs on this basis are set out in the following table. Distribution of the Welsh share of £3·5 million is a matter for the Secretary of State for Wales.

University Lectures

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many Universities Funding Council funded full-time lecturing staff there were in 1979; and how many there were at the most recent count.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Universities derive their funds from a variety of sources including the Universities Funding Council, and before it the University Grants Committee. The total number of wholly-university funded full-time academic staff with teaching and research duties in United Kingdom universities was 33,173 in 1979-80 and 30,644 in 1990-91. UGC and UFC funds respectively will have provided partial support for virtually all of these posts.

DEFENCE

Employment (Scotland)

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many armed forces personnel are currently located in Scotland.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: At 1 January 1992, there were a total of 19,845 regular armed forces personnel located in Scotland. These comprised 9,876 Royal Naval personnel, including sea service personnel in home waters with Scottish home ports, 2,978 Army personnel and 6,991 Royal Air Force personnel.

Gulf Trust

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much money the public has donated to the Gulf Trust.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I understand from the trustee of the Gulf Trust that almost £2,900,000 has been donated.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the answers, Official Report, 23 January, column 336, on what date the Gulf Trust will be formally wound up; and if he will, then provide information, about the amount of money allocated to each of the service benevolent funds.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The deed of trust for the Gulf Trust provides for the winding-up of the trust on 12 February 1993, or such longer period as the trustee may determine after consultation with the Secretary of State for Defence. The amount of money allocated to each of the service benevolent funds donated to the Gulf Trust will be announced when the Gulf Trust is wound up.

Northern Ireland

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the number in the forces who, while in service in Northern Ireland, have been (a) killed, (b) injured, (c) so seriously injured as to become disabled, (d) have suffered acknowledged mental distress and (e) have been discharged from the forces on medical grounds, including both physical and mental causes.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: From August 1969 until 31 December 1991, a total of 434 service men, excluding the Ulster Defence Regiment, were killed while on operations in Northern Ireland. Corresponding figures for injuries have been maintained centrally only from 1979. Since then, a total of 3,838 service men have been injured. Attributable figures for disablement, mental distress, and any consequential medical discharge are not available in the form requested.

UN Conference, Rio de Janeiro

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what contribution his Department is making to Her Majesty's Government's preparations for the United Nations conference on environment and development to be held in Rio de Janeiro in June.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: In common with other Government Departments, the Ministry of Defence is participating, as necessary, in the work required to develop and secure the Government's overall objectives for the UN conference on environment and development.

Cold Weather Monitoring

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the minimum overnight temperatures recorded by the Meteorological Office in degrees

Fahrenheit for cold weather purposes for each of the nights of January 1991 and January 1992 at (a) Boulmer weather station and (b) Eskdalemuir weather station.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I have asked the chief executive of the Meteorological Office to write to the hon. Member.

SCOTLAND

Project 2000

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what financial allocation has been made to each health board in 1991-92 and is proposed for 1992-93 in respect of Project 2000.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is as follows:

HIV and AIDS

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many non-haemophiliacs in Scotland have contracted HIV infection as a result of national health service transfers of (a) blood, (b) blood products and (c) tissue; and how many of each of these groups became infected before the introduction of screening of donations in October 1985.

Mr. Lang: I refer to the reply that my hon. Friend gave on 6 November 1991, Official Report, at column 175. The total number of reported cases in Scotland as at 31 January was 12.

I have announced today that the special financial help already made to those with haemophilia and HIV in Scotland is to be extended to those infected with HIV as a result of blood transfusion or tissue transfer in the United Kingdom.

Fishing Boats (Repairs)

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make it his policy to ensure that in the application of the 135-day tie-up rule no account will be taken of trips by fishing boats to enable them to undergo repairs.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I can confirm that where a vessel is tied up for repairs this period can count towards the 135 days. Of course, by definition time spent at sea in reaching a yard is not time in port in terms of EC Regulation 3882/91.

Forestry

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on progress achieved in development of United Kingdom forestry policy for the United Nations conference on environment and development to be held in Rio de Janeiro in June.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The United Nations conference on environment and development is expected to agree to a statement of principles for the sustainable management and development of forests, and to give a programme of action to conserve and to expand the world's forests. The Government fully support those initiatives.

Sustainable, multi-purpose forestry is central to the Government's domestic forestry policy which I am sure will fully accord with the agreements that are signed at the United Nations conference.

Cyclists

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many cyclists have been (a) injured and (b) killed in road traffic accidents in each year since 1981.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 14 February 1992]: The information requested on pedal cycle casualties in Scotland is as follows:

Traffic Cameras

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many automatic cameras have been installed at traffic-light-controlled junctions; and how many more are planned this year.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 14 February 1992]: One automatic camera has been introduced in Strathclyde region, where it will be used at six traffic-light-controlled junctions. A further six sites have been identified in the region at which an unmanned camera could usefully be installed. It is expected that these sites will come into operation this year.

It is a matter for each chief constable, in consultation with his roads authority, to decide where and to what extent cameras might with advantage be installed in his area.

Police Traffic Operations

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the latest available annual figures of (a) police traffic officers and (b) civilian staff working in police traffic departments, in each year since 1981.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 14 February 1992]: Details are given in the table. Information on civilian staff, other than traffic wardens, in traffic divisions is available only from 1988.

TRANSPORT

A19, Elwick

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the estimated lane rental cost of the road repairs to the A19 at Elwick, County Durham.

Mr. Chope: The A19 works at Elwick in Cleveland included an improvement scheme and was not considered suitable for lane rental.

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the duration of road repairs to the A19 at Elwick, County Durham.

Mr. Chope: There were two separate contracts for the A19 improvement and resurfacing works between Elwick and Wolviston, in Cleveland. They were as follows:

Elwick to Sheraton—12 October 1989 to 19 January 1990
Wolviston to Elwick—14 January to 7 September 1991

Both contracts were completed within the contract period.

Bypasses

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what expenditure is taking place this financial year on the Thornaby and Middleton St. George bypasses.

Mr. Chope: These schemes are the responsibility of the local highway authorities Cleveland county council and Durham county council.

Tees Viaduct

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the estimated cost of repairs to the A19 Tees viaduct carried out during 1991-92.

Mr. Chope: The estimated cost of work on the A19 Tees viaduct in 1991-92 is £2·6 million.

Air Safety

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has had with the chairmen of the Civil Aviation Authority and the airlines about the installation of water sprinklers in the cabins of civil aircraft; what testing of this equipment has taken place; and what assessment has been made of the merits of such equipment with respect to the effects of aircraft fires and the avoidance of long-term risks of physical damage to the passenger.

Mr. McLoughlin: My Department has kept in close touch on this matter with the Civil Aviation Authority, which has the statutory responsibility for matters of aviation safety. An extensive international programme of tests on water sprays has taken place with promising results so far. A further series of tests to study the effect of water sprays on passengers evacuating an aircraft will commence shortly; these will be conducted by the Cranfield Institute of Technology using the Fire Research Station's facility at Cardington and be sponsored by the CAA. The introduction into service of a water spray system would require international agreement and involve extensive consultation with the airline industry.

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions are taking place with his European counterparts about introducing common air safety standards on all EC-based airlines; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: On 16 December 1991 the EC Council of Transport Ministers adopted Regulation (EEC) No. 3922-91 on the harmonisation of technical requirements and administrative procedures in the field of civil aviation. This will ensure common safety and technical standards for EC aviation.

The United Kingdom continues to play a significant part in the work of the European Joint Aviation Authorities which is drawing up further safety standards with a view to their being adopted by the EC under the harmonization regulation.

East London River Crossing

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many residential properties not physically affected by the east London river crossing have so far been purchased by his Department on compassionate grounds.

Mr. Chope: Four properties have been purchased by the Department on the ground that conditions would be intolerable during construction of the scheme. The Department has agreed to buy one further property on those grounds, but the purchase has not yet been completed. All these purchases were agreed before the Secretary of State's powers of purchase were extended by the Planning and Compensation Act 1991. I announced the new guidelines which will be applied to such purchases in an answer to my right hon. Friend the Member for Tonbridge and Malling (Sir J. Stanley) on 21 November 1991, Official Report, column 237.

M1/M62 Link

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions his Department have had with Wakefield metropolitan district council and local parish or community councils within the Wakefield metropolitan distrtict with regard to the route of the proposed M1/M62 link road.

Mr. Chope: No formal discussions have been held because the proposed scheme is at an early stage of development. We are about to consult representative bodies and the public about possible alternative routes.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to announce the proposed route for the M1/M62 motorway link.

Mr. Chope: Public consultation into the options for a proposed link between the M1 south west of Wakefield and the M62 east of Huddersfield will start on 27 February 1992. It is only after the responses from the public and representative bodies are fully assessed that we will be able to make an announcement about a preferred route.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Official Secrets

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland at what level and within which public bodies in Northern Ireland members are required to comply with official secrets regulations.

Dr. Mawhinney: An offence under the Official Secrets Act 1989 may be committed by any person coming into possession of information of a class covered by that Act.

Crime Statistics

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will call for a report from the Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary as to what proportion of the clear-up rate for crime in his area in 1990-91 is accounted for by voluntary admissions by convicted criminals; how many detectives are employed to obtain these admissions; and when the practice ceased.

Dr. Mawhinney: Crimes in Northern Ireland are considered statistically cleared only when a charge has been preferred or a summons issued in relation to a specific offence.

Voluntary admissions by convicted criminals do not by themselves affect the clear up rate for crime. However, they are often received by detectives in the normal course of their investigations. No detectives are deployed solely to obtain such admissions.

Electoral Registers

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many persons were on the electoral registers published (a) in February 1983 and (b) February 1992 for each parliamentary constituency in Northern Ireland.

WALES

Inward Investment

10. Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the current level of inward investment to date in 1991-92.

Mr. David Hunt: 1991 was a record year with 183 projects promising over 17,000 new or safeguarded jobs and £860 million capital investment.

Receivership

14. Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of the number of companies that went into receivership in Wales between 1979 and 1983, between 1983 and 1989 and in 1990 and 1991.

Mr. David Hunt: None. There are no such records.

Mortgage Repossessions

15. Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has concerning the number of mortgage repossessions in Wales during 1991.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: There was a significant and very welcome reduction in the number of repossession actions initiated in the last quarter of 1991. As the impact of the package of measures agreed with mortgage lenders in December begins to take effect, the level of repossessions will continue to fall.

Tourism

16. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on tourism in Wales in 1991.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Although complete figures are not yet available the Wales tourist board expect that, despite a difficult year, tourism in Wales in 1991 will have maintained the impressive levels reached in 1990. Well-targeted investment in the Welsh tourist industry has taken place through a variety of schemes and very careful attention has been give to good quality customer care. My right hon. Friend was very pleased to launch the welcome host training initiative being run by the Wales Tourist board in conjunction with the Welsh training and enterprise councils.

I am confident that the tourist industry in Wales will go from strength to strength and in particular I look forward to the national garden festival which will be held at Ebbw Vale this year.

Health Service Staff

17. Mr. Grist: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the number of (a) physiotherapists, (b) occupational therapists, (c) speech therapists and (d) community psychiatric nurses in Wales in 1979 and at the latest available date.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The information is as follows:

Staff in post as at 30 September

Whole-time equivalents

	1979	1991
(a) Physiotherapists	354	650
(b) Occupational therapists	122	352
(c) Speech therapists	65	154

(d) Community psychiatric nurses: Complete information is not held centrally

EC Regional Policies

18. Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he next intends to meet EC Commissioner Millan to discuss the impact of EC regional policies on the economy of Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: I hope to meet Commissioner Millan on 20 February when I visit Brussels to open the Wales European centre.

Local Government Finance

19. Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he last met leaders of local authorities in Wales to discuss local government finance.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: My right hon. Friend chaired a meeting of the Welsh Consultative Council for Local Government Finance on 13 January to discuss the local government revenue settlement for 1992-93.

22. Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received from Powys county council concerning the rate support grant settlement for 1992-93.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: My right hon. Friend has not yet received any representations directly from Powys county council on the settlement for the coming year.

Labour Statistics

20. Mr. Ray Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what number of persons are now registered unemployed in Wales; and what was the number registered as unemployed in Wales in February 1979.

Mr. David Hunt: In January 1992, the seasonally adjusted unemployment figure for Wales was 123,600. The comparable figure for February 1979 was 70,500.

25. Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will state the number of male unemployed in Newport, Gwent and Wales at the latest available date.

Mr. David Hunt: In January 1992, there were 5,712, 16,063 and 101,149 unemployed male claimants in the Newport district, Gwent and Wales respectively.

Standard Spending Assessments

21. Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any plans to alter the standard spending assessment criteria for counties in Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The distribution formulae on which county authority's SSAs for 1992-93 are based have been agreed with the Assembly of Welsh Counties and ratified by the Welsh Consultative Council on Local Government Finance. The formulae for 1993-94 will be determined in the same way.

Hospitals (South Glamorgan)

23. Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he proposes to meet the chairman of South Glamorgan health authority concerning hospital provision within the county.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: My right hon. Friend has no plans to do so at present.

Recession

24. Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he last met local authority leaders in Wales to discuss the impact of the recession and job losses on their communities.

Mr. David Hunt: I regularly meet local authority leaders and discuss a wide range of issues with them.

Water Charges

26. Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will arrange to meet the chairman of Welsh Water plc to discuss the basis of water charging in Wales after the introduction of a new house value system for the purposes of the proposed council tax; and if he will consider in that context the need for changes in legislation to enable the water company to make rebates to single person households or those on low incomes.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: No. Under section 142 of the Water Industry Act 1991 it is for the water undertaker to determine how charges are calculated. Water charges pay for the provision of a service. It is for the social security system to provide allowances for general living expenses to those in need.

Music Targets

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales why he decided to adopt three attainment targets for music in the national curriculum for Wales as published on 3 February; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The proposals for music in the national curriculum, including the proposals for three attainment targets, were issued for consultation in August last year. The consultation period ended on 1 November. The Curriculum Council for Wales, which has statutory responsibility for advising the Secretary of State on curriculum matters, and the majority of respondents in Wales endorsed a structure which included three attainments targets. The order will also provide opportunities for pupils in Wales to benefit from the Welsh musical heritage as well as other sources.

Deprivation

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will state the basis on which resources of the rural capital projects initiative will be distributed within Wales; whether it will be geared to the indices of the Welsh deprivation table; and what consideration he will give in this allocation of these funds to those areas, identified as qualifying in terms of deprivation, which have, over recent years, not attracted significant investment under the urban aid programme.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The main objective of the rural initiative competition is to identify those projects likely to be of most benefit to rural communities. Each application is considered on its individual merits and careful account is taken of the views of local authorities and the relevant agencies. The allocation of funds is not based on the ward index of deprivation, which was constructed for a different purpose.

This is a new initiative which, assuming that good quality projects are submitted, will benefit rural communities throughout the Principality.

Animal Carcases

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received concerning the disposal of farm animal carcases; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: Occasional correspondence on the subject of the disposal of farm animal carcases has been received.

Intensive Poultry Units

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what guidelines are issued to local authority planning departments regarding the development of intensive poultry units; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: Advice on planning controls over livestock units its given in planning policy guidance note No. 7 "The Countryside and the Rural Economy"—annex B, paragraphs B 3-1 to B 3-6—issued in January this year.

Agriculture

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what effect his Department estimates the present proposals for a GATT settlement will have upon the agricultural industry in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: The Council of the European Communities has instructed the Commission to negotiate improvements in the draft text prepared by the GATT director general, Mr. Dunkel. It has noted that a final assessment will be possible only after such negotiations have taken place.

Dairy Producers

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many dairy producers have left the industry in Wales during the last 10 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: Information is not available in the form requested. However, the number of milk producers in Wales in 1981 and 1991 was as follows:

Milk Producers (a)

	Number
(b) 1981	7,566
(c) 1991	5,539

(a) From the register maintained under the Milk and Dairies (General) Regulations 1959
(b) Figures at December
(c) Figures at September

This takes account of both new entrants and producers leaving the dairy industry.

Trunk Roads

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much was spent per mile on trunk roads in each of the Welsh counties during the last year for which figures are available; what were the corresponding figures for the previous 10 years; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The information is as follows:

Road Improvements, Fishguard

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will hold a public inquiry into the proposed road improvement schemes to be carried out in Fishguard; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: I have yet to publish my proposals in the form of draft orders for the diversion at Lower Town and a route 6 western bypass of Fishguard. A decision to hold a public inquiry for either will be taken in the light of any objections received following publication of my proposals.

Business Rates

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimates he has for the cost of allowing businesses in Wales to remain eligible for transitional relief from the uniform business rate although they move premises in 1992-93; and what would be the additional cost of returning eligibility for transitional relief in 1992-93 to those businesses who moved premises in 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. David Hunt: Transitional relief does not attach to businesses but to the premises they occupy. The additional cost of returning transitional protection to properties where there was a change of occupier in 1990-91 or 1991-92 would be around £1 million. No estimate is possible for 1992-93.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the cost of increasing the thresholds at which Welsh businesses are eligible for the small business category of uniform business rate transitional relief, from a rateable value of £10,000 to £15,000 in the financial year 1992-93.

Mr. David Hunt: I estimate that the cost of increasing the small property threshold for uniform business rate transitional relief to £15,000 would be about £5 million in 1992-93.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has of the cost of cancelling the announced increase in the national non-domestic rate poundage for Wales in 1992-93; and what would be the cost of reducing that increase to (a) 3 per cent., (b) 2 per cent., and (c) 1 per cent.

Mr. David Hunt: I estimate the cost of underindexing the national non-domestic rate poundage for Wales in 1992-93 would be approximately £5 million for each one percentage point. Cancelling the increase of just over 4 per cent. on the 1991-92 multiplier would cost approximately £20 million.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will estimate the cost in 1992-93 of extending the transitional relief scheme for the uniform business rate in Wales so that all losses are suspended in the coming financial year, while all gains continue to be phased in according to the transitional arrangements.

Mr. David Hunt: I estimate that the cost of reducing the real terms transitional limits to 0 per cent. in 1992-93 would be around £15 million.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will estimate the cost of lowering the maximum permissible annual increase in uniform business rate bills for Welsh businesses in (a) nominal and (b) real terms (i) for small businesses from 15 per cent. to 10 per cent. and (ii) for larger businesses, from 20 per cent. to 15 per cent. in 1992-93.

Mr. David Hunt: The cost of lowering the maximum annual transition increase by 5 per cent. for (i) small businesses and (ii) larger businesses whether in nominal or real terms, would be about £5 million in each case, £10 million in total.

Monmouth

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many inward investment projects have been attracted to Monmouth travel-to-work area since 1979; and if he will give details of those projects;

(2) what proposals he has to attract business investment and quality jobs to the Monmouth travel-to-work area.

Mr. David Hunt: Comprehensive records are not available from 1979.

Wales has, however, secured record levels of inward investment in recent years and continuing efforts are made to draw to the attention of investors the advantages of locations throughout Wales. This includes targeted campaigns such as IT Wales and the financial services initiative. A range of assistance and considerable expert advice to aid industrial development is available from the Welsh Office and the Welsh Development Agency and tourism developments are encouraged by schemes operated by the Wales tourist board.

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what delegation he has agreed to meet concerning the application for assisted area status for the Monmouth travel-to-work area;

(2) when he proposes to meet a delegation on behalf of Monmouth borough council, Monmouth town council, Gwent county council and Monmouth chamber of commerce concerning the application for assisted area status for the Monmouth travel-to-work area;

(3) when he next proposes to meet representatives of the business community in Monmouth to discuss business investment.

Mr. David Hunt: I have agreed to meet a deputation to discuss business investment in the area, including assisted area status, but the details have not yet been finalised.

Assisted Area Status

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the travel-to-work areas in south Wales which do not have assisted area status.

Mr. David Hunt: Taking the area south of that covered by the Development Board of Rural Wales, there are three travel-to-work areas which are not assisted areas. These are Carmarthen, Llandeilo and Monmouth.

Council House Sales

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the levels of debt that each district authority in Wales is required to redeem from capital receipts from the sale of council houses.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The table sets out for each authority the amount required to be set aside for credit liabilities from the sale of council houses up to 31 March 1991.

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has as to whether local authorities in Wales are investing their permitted level of capital receipts from the sale of council houses in new housing.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The information requested is not held centrally.

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proportion of 1990-91 capital receipts from the sale of council houses each local authority in Wales has actually spent on housing.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Authorities may apply the usable part of capital receipts to any capital purpose. The information requested is not held centrally.

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many houses he estimates could be constructed in each local authority in Wales if those local authorities were permitted to spend (a) 50 per cent., (b) 75 per cent. and (c) 100 per cent. of their 1990-91 capital receipts from the sale of council houses.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: It is not possible to make such estimates in view of factor cost variations and other considerations, including those related to sound financial and resource management.

Further Education

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make provision for special transitional arrangements, pending the setting up of the Further Education Funding Council for Wales, to enable suitable premises to be found for further education students and staff currently located at the Llandaf and Colchester avenue campuses of the Cardiff institute of higher education; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: My right hon. Friend the Minister of State has agreed to meet a deputation from South Glamorgan county council, South Glamorgan TEC and the Construction Industry training board to discuss the local authority's proposals.

Listed Buildings

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment has been made by CADW of listed buildings in Monmouth.

Sir Wyn Roberts: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has a duty to compile a list of buildings of special architectural or historic interest for the guidance of local planning authorities. A detailed survey of Monmouth was undertaken in 1974 which identified 169 buildings. Since then, in response to inquiries made to the Department a further six buildings have been added to the statutory list.

Health Service

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the amount allocated by each district health authority in Wales to the extra-contractual budget.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Information relating to the reserves which each health authority in Wales has set aside in 1991-92 for extra contractual referrals is as follows:

Sites of Archaeological Significance

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the duties of local authority planning departments with regard to development on sites of archaeological significance.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The desirability of preserving archaeological remains is a material consideration which local planning authorities are obliged to consider. To assist authorities we have made available guidance: planning policy guidance note 16 (Wales) archaeology and planning, a copy of which is available in the Library of the House.

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received regarding Monmouth's archaeological significance; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: No general representations have been received about the archaeological significance of Monmouth although I, and the Department, fully appreciate the importance of the town's archaeology.

Shared Ownership Accommodation

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the number of shared ownership houses and flats due to be completed by local authorities and housing associations in Wales in the current financial year.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Information about the intended tenure of local authority dwellings under construction is not available centrally. A total of 270 shared ownership dwellings are expected to be completed by housing associations in Wales in 1991-92. In addition it is estimated that 602 dwellings for flexible tenure for the elderly will be completed, many of which could be expected to be occupied on a shared equity basis.

Chippenham Mead, Monmouth

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received regarding proposed development of Chippenham Mead in Monmouth.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: My right hon. Friend has received four letters and a petition containing over 300 signatures, objecting to two proposed developments on, or adjacent to, Chippenham Mead village green, and asking for the two applications for planning permission to be called-in for his determination. These planning applications are for the proposed continuation of use of part of the village green for temporary periods for caravan rallies and associated parking of motor vehicles and the proposed construction of a supermarket and customer car park on Monnow street, Monmouth. These call-in requests are being considered and decisions on them will be reached shortly.

My right hon. Friend is also considering a request from Monmouth borough council for his consent under the Commons Act 1899 to set aside part of the village green for the temporary parking of vehicles. So far he has received 52 letters on the proposals, 48 of which are objections.

Building Costs

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the current average cost of building one unit of social housing in Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The average cost of a housing association unit inclusive of private sector funding at tender approval stage this financial year, to mid-January, is £41,000.

ENVIRONMENT

Derelict Land Grant

Mr. Hague: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much has been spent in derelict land grant in Darlington since 1979; and how many acres have been restored as a result.

Mr. Yeo: Records for derelict land grant—DLG—payments towards reclamation schemes in Darlington, and the amount of land reclaimed, are not available for the full period covered by the question. However the expenditure incurred by Darlington borough council on DLG-supported reclamation, and the figures for the amount of land reclaimed are as follows:

Darlington borough council: derelict land grant expenditure and land reclaimed

1981-82	187,611	n/a

1983-84	319,094	12·97
1984-85	254,514	13·91
1985-86	589,788	6·79
1986-87	536,772	24·21
1987-88	269,442	1·24
1988-89	284,697	41·74
1989-90	563,164	18·43
1990-91	529,567	14·89
Total	4,330,847	134·17

A further £32,697 has been spent by Durham county council in reclaiming 10·03 acres of land in Darlington.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is (a) the total acreage of national parks in England and (b) the current total acreage of designated environmentally sensitive areas in England; and what will be the total acreage of environmentally sensitive areas in England when the further designations, recently announced, have been fully implemented.

Mr. Baldry: The seven national parks in England cover 2,348,000 acres. The 10 existing ESAs in England cover some 956,300 acres. The total acreage of all ESAs is expected to be around 2,870,000 acres when the further designations, recently announced, have been fully implemented.

Local Government Finance

Sir David Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what is the 1992-93 precept per community charge payer proposed by Tadley town council in the borough of Basingstoke;

(2) how many parish or town councils have proposed a precept of £29·88 or more per community charge payer for 1992-93.

Mr. Portillo: This information is not available to me.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will state the basis of the sum of £2,469,200,000 ascribed to debt charges in annex B of the Revenue Support Grant Distribution (Amendment) (No. 2) Report (England) H.C. 190.91/92 and the estimated total of all relevant local authorities receiving grant consequent to the report;

(2) if he will state the basis on which he determined the formulae concerning the global sum and distribution of standard spending assessments, respectively for repayment of and interest on approved capital expenditure by local authorities, together with references to documents where such statements and formulae were publicly available.

Mr. Key: Total standard spending for 1992-93 represents the Government's view of the appropriate amount of revenue spending by local authorities to provide all services. Within that, the total amount allowed for the revenue consequences of capital spending represents the relative priority to be afforded to this type of expenditure, bearing in mind relevant factors such as likely movements in interest rates.

The method of distribution of the SSA element for debt charges is set out in the Revenue Support Grant Distribution (Amendment) Report (No. 2) (England). The basis of this approach is described in the publication by the Department of the Environment "SSAs Background and Underlying Methodology"; copies of both documents are in the Library.

All 366 charging authorities receive revenue support grant.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from representative local authority organisations concerning the difference between the total of the standard spending assessments concerning capital charges and the amount they have, or are liable, to disperse in respect of their authorised borrowing requirements.

Mr. Key: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment announced his proposals for the 1992-93 revenue support grant settlement to the House on 26 November 1991. During the consultation period following that announcement representations on the capital financing element of standard spending assessments—SSAs—were received from the Association of Metropolitan Authorities—AMA—and the Association of County Councils. Both associations commented on the proposed total within SSAs for capital expenditure financed from the revenue account. The AMA also questioned the total available for debt charges and the link with falling interest rates.

Mr. Wells: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, when he expects to announce the outcome of the consultation on the local government finance settlement for 1992-93; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heseltine [pursuant to his answer, 23 January 1992, c. 277]: Since the approval of the revenue support grant report, I have formed the view that fresh circumstances affecting the finances of local authorities have arisen. I have today laid before the House the "Additional Grant Report (England) 1992-93", which contains my determination of the total amount of grant to be paid to local authorities in England, and the basis on which it is to be distributed; and I have placed in the vote office copies of a letter and table, showing individual grant entitlements, that is being sent to all local authorities today.

Mrs. Currie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in rank order the SSA per head for the English shire counties for the forthcoming year, and for 1991-92.

Montreal Protocol

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will press for an emergency meeting of the Montreal protocol convention.

Mr. Trippier: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Bury, South (Mr. Sumberg) on 11 February 1992, Official Report column 430.

Lead Pollution

Mr. Summerson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has to reduce the amount of lead in the environment by reducing the proportion of lead that any product may contain.

Mr. Baldry: The Government's policy is to reduce man's exposure to lead wherever reasonably practicable. To this end, a number of measures have already been taken in the form of reductions in the amount of lead in petrol and encouragement in the use of unleaded petrol. Already in 1992 regulations to restrict the use of certain lead compounds in paints have been laid before Parliament. Further regulations to restrict the use of lead solders are currently being drafted. The Government are also continuing discussions with relevant bodies at both national and international level with the aim of identifying where additional measures to reduce man's exposure to lead are viable.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many sites of special scientific interest are currently designated.

Mr. Baldry: To date there are 3,559 sites of special scientific interest in England designated under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981.

Housing, Stockton

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many houses have been (a) constructed and (b) repaired using funds from the Housing Corporation in the Stockton, South constituency in the current financial year.

Mr. Yeo: The distribution of resources among local authority areas is a matter for the Housing Corporation. I have, therefore, asked the corporation to reply direct to my hon. Friend with the information he has requested. A copy of the reply will be placed in the Library of the House.

Animal Imports

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he has taken to implement the Convention on Trade in Endangered Species conference resolution 7.13, on welfare checks at the point of importation of all consignments of live animals.

Mr. Baldry: The steps the Government have taken to include requiring exporters of live specimens to transport the specimens in accordance with the International Air Transport Association live animals regulations, and the collection of information on the mortality of birds during transport. Compliance with the IATA regulations will become mandatory throughout the community from 1 January 1993 under EC directive 91/628 on the protection of animals during transport. We shall continue to press for further Community action. We are considering the need for other measures.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps are taken to ensure the validity of declarations made by applicants for permits to import live animals to the effect that they have proper facilities for the accommodation of the species they wish to import and that the animals will be properly transported and cared for.

Mr. Baldry: It is an offence knowingly or recklessly to make a false declaration or provide false information for the purposes of obtaining an import permit. In the event of any doubt about the facilities available for accommodating an imported specimen, or the ability of an importer to care for a specimen adequately, the Department would pursue the matter in consultation with its scientific advisers. Follow-up action could, if appropriate, include asking for further details from the applicant or arranging for an inspection of the premises. If we were not satisfied that the appropriate standards were met, we would refuse to issue a permit.

For certain species, the Department asks new traders and those who move premises to supply information about their facilities.

Housing Associations

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much has been spent by housing associations in the Chelmsford parliamentary constituency in each year since 1979; and how many units of housing this has provided.

Mr. Yeo: The distribution of resources among local authority areas is a matter for the Housing Corporation. I have therefore asked the corporation to reply direct to my hon. Friend with the information he has requested. A copy of the reply will be placed in the Library of the House.

Housing, Liverpool

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to visit Liverpool in the near future; and if, on his next visit to the city, he will meet residents of the Norris Green and Dovecot housing estates to discuss housing and environment matters.

Sir George Young: My right hon. Friend has no plans to visit Liverpool in the near future. I am visiting Merseyside on 26 February and spending some time in Liverpool and Wirral, where I will be speaking at a seminar. Either I or my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State responsible for housing, will be happy to consider a visit to these estates on a future occasion, once the city council has started to develop options for tackling the problems.

Travellers

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing the twice-yearly count of gipsy caravans for each year since 1982 in (a) England, (b) Buckinghamshire, (c) south Buckinghamshire and (d) Wycombe.

Mr. Yeo: I am placing this information in the Library of the House.

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many gipsy caravans were shown as being in the county of Surrey in each of the twice-yearly counts carried out for his Department by local authorities in each of the past 10 years; and how many of these were in the Boroughs of Woking and Guildford, respectively.

Sir George Young: I am placing this information in the Library of the House.

Business Rates

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimates he has of (a) the yield from national non-domestic rates in England and Wales in (i) 1991-92 and (ii) 1992-93, (b) the yield from business rates in Scotland in (i) 1991-92 and (ii) 1992-93, (c) how the revenue between (a)(ii) and (a)(i), and (b)(ii) and (b)(i), respectively, breaks down in terms of the increases in poundage, changes in the commercial property base and changes in the valuations that have occurred.

Mr. Portillo: The estimated amount which I expect to be paid by way of rates and contributions in aid of rates for Crown property in England in respect of 1991-92 and 1992-93 are shown in the table together with the detailed assumptions. These estimates of yield formed the bases of the distributable amount of non-domestic rates for 1992-93 announced by my right hon. Friend on 6 November 1991.

Estimated gross rate yield (aggregate rateable value x multiplier)	13,369	13,923
Additions to Gross rate yield
Enterprise Zones coming into rating	21	56
Buoyancy between 1991-92 and 1992-93 (new and improved properties net of demolitions etc.)	—	156
Net effect of transitional arrangements	49	35
Reductions to Gross rate yield
Appeals in 1992-93 (gross of transitional arrangements)	−176	−168
Reliefs, allowance for losses on collection etc.	−1,226	−1,218
Net yield from ratepayers (on an accruals basis, excluding the effect of appeals determined in future years)	12,037	12,784

The arrangements for non-domestic rates in Wales and Scotland are matters for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales and for Scotland.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate the cost to the Exchequer of cancelling the first monthly instalment of uniform business rate bills for businesses in England and Wales in 1992-93; and what would be the equivalent cost to Scottish local authorities as a whole with respect to business rate bills.

Mr. Portillo: The total amount which would be forgone as a result of cancelling the April 1992 instalment in England would be approximately £1·28 billion. This estimate includes contributions in aid of rates in respect of Crown property. Non-domestic rates contributions in Scotland and Wales are matters for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Wales respectively.

Local Councils (Survey)

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the survey carried out by the university of Aston business school on the work of parish and town councils.

Mr. Key: I refer the hon. Member to my answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Northfield (Mr. King) on 13 February 1992, Official Report columns 572-73.

Leeds Development Corporation

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out by standard industrial classification the numbers employed in the area covered by the Leeds Development Corporation at its inception, and the latest available figures.

Mr. Key: The information requested is not available. Leeds development corporation does not analyse employment numbers within its areas by standard industrial classification.

Water Companies

Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many shareholders there are in the 10 water companies in England and Wales.

Mr. Baldry: The companies themselves would be able to give the latest figures. However 1,096,025 shareholders paid the final instalment for the shares in July last year.

Poll Tax

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to have information in his Department on the level of the poll tax from most local authorities.

Mr. Key: Charging authorities are required to set their budgets for 1992-93 by 11 March and to set their community charges for 1992-93 on or before 1 April. We have asked them to report the community charges within seven days of setting them, or by 2 April 1992 at the latest.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment between which dates he estimates the majority of poll tax bills will be delivered by local authorities.

Mr. Key: An authority must set its community charge by 1 April and issue bills as soon as possible after the charge has been set.

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has, at the latest convenient date, as to how much of the outstanding poll tax owed to local authorities is owed by people in receipt of poll tax rebate.

Mr. Key [holding answer 14 February 1992]: This information is not available.

Leigh Barton

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many workmen have been involved in the repair work preventing the historic monument Leigh Barton from being opened to the public since 1986, in each of the last five years; and in what crafts there is a shortage of skilled workmen to complete the repairs.

Mr. Yeo: A team of four general craftsmen have been working at Leigh Barton since 1986. There is no shortage of skilled workmen to complete the repairs.

Road System, Leicester

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether a full environmental impact assessment has been carried out for the various suggested alternatives for the Leicester eastern district distributor road.

Mr. Yeo: I am advised that Leicestershire county council as the highway authority responsible is taking environmental considerations into account in examining a number of alternatives for this road. When the route is finalised the county council, as planning authority, will consider the need for an environmental statement.

Gulf War (Marine Pollution)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will make a statement on the effect upon the breeding and feeding grounds for the Penaid shrimp in the Tanajib Manifa embayment system of oil spilled during the Gulf war;

(2) what steps have been taken to restore the ecology for the wader and inter-tidal invertebrates in the Gulf following the Gulf war.

Mr. Baldry: The primary responsibility for such questions rests with other Governments. My reply to the hon. Member of 15 January Official Report, column 573, sets out the contribution that the United Kingdom has made.

Urban Programme

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list the level of grant per head of population for Blackburn, Burnley, Knowsley, Liverpool, Manchester, Preston, Rochdale, Salford, Middlesbrough, Birmingham, Coventry, Sandwell, Wolverhampton, Leicester, Nottingham, Bradford and Kingston upon Hull, respectively in the financial years 1980-81, 1983-84, 1986-87 and 1989-90, for the urban programme category of central Government revenue funding of local authorities;

(2) if he will list the level of grant per head of population for each of the standard economic regions and in Greater London in the financial years 1980-81, 1983-84, 1986-87 and 1989-90 for the urban programme category of central Government revenue funding of local authorities;

(3) if he will list the level of grant per head of population for Brent, Greenwich, Hackney, Hammersmith and Fulham, Haringey, Islington, Kensington and Chelsea, Lambeth, Lewisham, Newham, Southwark, Tower Hamlets and Wandsworth, respectively in the financial years 1980-81, 1983-84, 1986-87 and 1989-90, for the urban programme category of central Government revenue funding of local authorities.

Mr. Key [holding answer 7 February 1992]: The tables provide total capital and revenue outturn figures for the urban programme for 1980-81, 1983-84, 1986-87 and 1989-90.

Separate revenue figures are not readily available before 1988-89.

Urban programme expenditure is targeted on the most deprived inner city areas within the local authorities' boundaries: population figures for these areas are not readily available.

Hong Kong (Ministerial Visit)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether, on his visit to Hong Kong in December 1988, the then Secretary of State took part in party political activities in addition to official duties.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 13 February 1992]: I understand that my right hon. Friend undertook only official duties during his brief visit which came at the end of a visit to China to discuss environmental matters.

Business Rates

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate he has of the cost of cancelling the increase in the national non-domestic rate poundage for England in 1992-93 which he announced in his answer to the hon. Member for Hyndburn (Mr. Hargreaves) of 6 November 1991 Official Report, column 158; and what would be the cost of reducing that increase to (a) 3 per cent., (b) 2 per cent. and (c) 1 per cent.

Mr. Portillo: I estimate that the cost of cancelling the increase of just over 4 per cent. on the 1991-92 uniform business rate multiplier would be approximately £500 million. Under-indexing would cost approximately £125 million for each percentage point.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the cost of increasing the thresholds at which businesses are elegible for the small business category of uniform business rate transitional relief from a rateable value of £10,000 to £15,000 outside London, and from a rateable value of £15,000 to £25,000 within London for the financial year 1992-93.

Mr. Portillo: I estimate that the cost in England would be about £25 million.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate the cost in 1992-93 of extending the transitional relief scheme for the uniform business rate in England so that all losses are suspended in the coming financial year, while all gains continue to be phased in according to the transitional arrangements.

Mr. Portillo: I estimate that the cost of freezing rate increases in real terms, for 1992-93, for ratepayers subject to transitional arrangements would be around £300 million.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate he has of the cost of lowering the maximum permissible annual increase in uniform business rate bills in (a) nominal and (b) real terms, (i) for small businesses, from 15 to 10 per cent. and (ii) for larger businesses, from 20 to 15 per cent. in 1992-93.

Mr. Portillo: I estimate that the cost in 1992-93 of confining the maximum annual transitional increase to 10 per cent. for small properties and 15 per cent. for large ones would be about £140 million. The cost of confining the maximum increase to the same limits in real terms would be about £70 million.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Life Sentences

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Attorney-General if he will ask the Law Commission to consider the matter of life stentences; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The Law Commission's work on the criminal code will, in time, encompass the whole of the criminal law and will therefore necessarily include all those offences which may attract a life sentence. My right hon. and learned Friend the Lord Chancellor has, however, no plans to invite the Law Commission to embark upon a separate consideration of that penalty.

Mortgage Repossessions

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Attorney-General how many orders of repossession of property in favour of building societies or other lending institutions were made (a) by the Cardiff county court and (b) by the Pontypridd magistrates court in 1979, 1990 and 1991.

The Attorney-General: Mortgage possession actions are dealt with in the county court only. The 1979 figures are not available. The total number of mortgage possession actions entered, suspended orders and orders made during 1990 and 1991 in each county court in England and Wales is contained in two lists which have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses of Parliament. These figures do not indicate how many houses have been repossessed through the courts as not all the orders made will have resulted in the issue and execution of warrants of possession. At this stage, the 1991 figures are provisional and, therefore, liable to revision in the future.

Mr. Anderson: To ask the Attorney-General how many orders of repossession of property in favour of building societies or other lending institutions were made by the Swansea county court in 1979, 1990 and 1991.

The Attorney-General: The 1979 figures are not available. The total number of mortgage possession actions entered, suspended orders and orders made during 1990 and 1991 in each county court in England and Wales is contained in two lists which have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses of Parliament. These figures do not indicate how many houses have been repossessed through the courts as not all the orders made will have resulted in the issue and execution of warrants of possession. At this stage, the 1991 figures are provisional and, therefore, liable to revision in the future.

Next Steps

Mr. Carrington: To ask the Attorney-General if he has identified any candidates within his Department for agency status under the next steps initiative.

The Attorney-General: Following a feasibility study, I have selected the Treasury Solicitor's Department's property division as a candidate for executive agency status.

I am confident that a move to agency status will be beneficial, enabling the agency to operate with greater freedom and with more clearly defined responsibilities within an agreed framework of objectives, performance targets, and resources. The move will, I believe, lead to improvements in efficiency and effectiveness.

Detailed discussions on an agency framework document have now been set in hand, and we will carry planning forward with a view to establishing the division as an executive agency on 1 April 1993.

THE ARTS

Items in Lieu of Tax

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Minister for the Arts if there have been any items accepted in lieu of tax or allocated since the announcement was last made on the subject to the House.

Mr. Renton: I am pleased to inform the House that two offers in lieu of tax have been accepted since my announcement on 28 November 1991, Official Report, column 579.

The offer of the painting "Poele de l'Atelier" by Cezanne will satisfy £750,562 tax. It is offered on condition that it be allocated to the national gallery and it has therefore been allocated to that institution.

The offer of eight contemporary paintings will satisfy £108,920 tax. The contemporary paintings are:

'Bomb Store' by David Bomberg
'Self-Portrait, recto and verso' by David Bomberg
'Ghetto Theatre' by David Bomberg
'Women and Goat' by Robert Colquhoun
'Two Figures Monotype' by Robert Colquhoun
'Man Hosing Metal Fish Boxes' by Prunella Clough
'Pears' by William Scott
An untitled work by Roger Hilton

'Bomb Store' by David Bomberg and the Prunella Clough painting have been temporarily allocated to the Tate gallery and the remainder to the Wakefield city art gallery, pending a decision on the collection's permanent allocation.

ENVIRONMENT

Housing, Leicester

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what extra cost Leicester city council is to be required to meet in relation to the cost of removing houses built by the council on the Goodwood road part of the distributor road network.

Mr. Portillo: Leicestershire county council has not yet determined its preferred route for the Leicester eastern district distributor road from the city boundary to the A47. Therefore it is not certain whether houses owned by Leicester city council on Goodwood road would be affected. However if demolition were necessary, the county, and not the city, would be responsible for meeting the costs and those of replacement.

Local Government Finance

Sir David Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list powers he has to control excessive expenditure by a parish or town council; and if he will exercise them in the case of Tadley town council in the borough of Basingstoke.

Mr. Portillo: We have no such powers. We expect parish and town councils to budget prudently. We have, however, included a provision in the Local Government Finance Bill, currently before Parliament, which would allow my right hon. Friend, by order, to bring parish precepts within the budgets of districts for the purposes of capping.

Ultraviolet Light

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangements exist for the monitoring of ultraviolet light in the United Kingdom and for making the data public; and what research is undertaken to relate the data to the environmental and health impacts.

Mr. Baldry: Ultraviolet radiation is monitored continuously in the United Kingdom by the National Radiological Protection Board—NRPB—at three locations—Chilton, Oxfordshire; Leeds; and Glasgow. The data are published annually in NRPB reports. The Department of the Environment is funding improved ultraviolet radiation monitoring methods at Reading university. The results are disseminated as research publications.

The Department of the Environment funds research into the impact of increased ultraviolet radiation on vegetation. The NRPB advises the Department of Health on health effects of ultraviolet light and has established an advisory group which will review new studies and advise on the need for further research.

Council Tax

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 6 December, Official Report, columns 235-36, why he has decided not to publish any analysis of the impact of the council tax using the tax-benefit model; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: Modelling the possible impact of the council tax requires a large number of assumptions. Because of this, the results of any such modelling would be subject to wide and unquantifiable margins of error.

City Challenge

Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made with the city challenge initiative.

Mr. Key: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State launched the first round of city challenge in May 1991 and invited 15 local authorities to submit bids for resources for 1992-93. Bids for 11 areas were successful in the competition and, subject to satisfactory implementation of action plans and the availability of resources, each area will be allocated £37·5 million in city challenge resources over five years.

The first of the 11 action plans, for the Sneinton and St Ann's area of Nottingham, was formally approved on 17 February. It is hoped that the remaining plans, for areas of Manchester, Liverpool, Wirral, Middlesbrough, Newcastle, Wolverhampton, Bradford, Lewisham, Tower Hamlets and Dearne Valley, will receive final approval shortly.

My right hon. Friend announced today that for the second round of city challenge, starting in 1993-94, all 57 local authorities currently in the urban programme will be invited to bid for city challenge resources.

My right hon. Friend intends to make resources available for 20 winning areas. Again they should each benefit from funding for some £37·5 million over the five years of their action plan. These 20 winning areas will be in addition to the 11 which were successful in the first round of city challenge.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many local authorities he expects to be awarded city challenge money in the next round of competition; and on what date he will announce the winners.

Mr. Portillo: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given today by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, my hon. Friend the Member for Salisbury (Mr. Key), to my hon. Friend the Member for Nottingham, South (Mr. Brandon-Bravo).

Ozone Depletion

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the rate of development of ozone-depletion problems; and if he proposes to take any further measures in response to such developments.

Mr. Baldry: Reports have been received from the European arctic stratospheric ozone experiment—EASOE—and the United States National Aeronautic and Space Agency—NASA—of low ozone levels over the mid-latitudes of the northern hemisphere and in the tropics. The answer given by my hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment and Countryside to my hon. Friend the Member for Bury, South (Mr. Sumberg) on 10 February, Official Report, column 430, sets out what further measures we have proposed.

Community Charge

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list those local authorities which received such grants from central funds which, together with other income or contributions from balances, were able to determine that the community charge for the current year would be less than £100;

(2) if he will list those authorities which have secured grants from central funds which together with other income and contributions from balances have been able to determine that the community charge for 1992-93 will be less than £100.

Mr. Key: The following authorities maintained a tight control over their expenditure and were able to determine a community charge in 1991-92 below £100:

Rochester upon Medway
Wandsworth
Westminster

Information about the levels of community charges in 1992-93 is not yet available.

Housing Investment, Liverpool

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the level of the housing investment programme allocation awarded to Liverpool in each financial year since 1978-79; and what the changes amounted to, in real terms.

Mr. Yeo: Housing investment programme—HIP—allocation and gross capital expenditure figures are as follows:

Notes:

[1] Since 1981-82 local authorities have been able to augment the borrowing power of their HIP allocations by using the prescribed proportion of their capital receipts.

[3] Provisional estimate of final allocation.

[4] Not available.

An initial HIP allocation of £26·7 million—£25·6 million at 1991-92 prices—has been issued for 1992-93 and additional resources—supplementary credit approvals—may be allocated later.

Chorley Report

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action has been taken following the Government's response to the Chorley report on handling geographic information.

Mr. Baldry: Following the Chorley report and the Government's response, the Government established an inter-departmental working group on the tradeable information initiative. The working group, which is chaired by my Department, has collated a summary of actions taken by individual departments in response to the recommendations made by Lord Chorley's committee of inquiry. A copy of the summary has been placed in the Library of the House, and a copy given to the Association for Geographic Information—AGI—as part of the Government's contribution to the association's review of progress against the Chorley committee's recommendations. In addition, the working group has collected details about spatially referenced data sets held by Government Departments. These details have been given to the AGI which has used them to establish an information service to answer inquiries about the data sets. The information service went live in January 1992.

Business Rates

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimates he has for the cost of allowing businesses in England to remain eligible for transitional relief from the uniform business rate although they move premises in 1992-93; and what would be the additional cost of returning eligibility for transitional relief in 1992-93 to those businesses that moved premises in 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 17 February 1992]: Transitional relief does not attach to businesses but to the property they occupy. The relief for the property is lost when the occupier changes. I estimate that the cost for the period 1990-91 to 1992-93 of returning transitional protection to property where there was a change of occupier in 1990-91 or 1991-92 would be around £90 million. The cost of allowing protection where there was a change of occupier in 1992-93 would be around £10 million.

Local Authorities (Financial Difficulties)

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his policy towards centre funding of local authorities which have financial difficulties due to (a) the collapse of BCCI and (b) late rating appeals and (c) interest rate swaps; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo [pursuant to his reply, 17 December 1991, c. 108]: My right hon. Friend intends to issue directions permitting local authorities which have incurred losses in BCCI and the Chancery and Edington banks to treat those losses as capital expenditure, where these are substantial in relation to an authority's revenue budget and reserves. He does not propose to approve any of the applications he has received for supplementary credit approvals—SCAs—related to such losses.

However, my right hon. Friend is now minded, out of resources which are available as a result of certain SCAs not being taken up to the anticipated extent, to issue SCAs to provide some assistance to those authorities most affected in 1991-92 by late rating adjustments of which they could not have been aware with certainty when setting their 1991-92 budgets. He has today invited authorities to provide him with information about their late rating adjustments, after receipt of which he intends to decide the level of assistance which in all the circumstances would be appropriate.

Assisted and Development Areas

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those areas in receipt of assisted or development area status, together with their working population.

Mr. Leigh: I have been asked to reply.

Notes:

(1) The work force estimates are the sum of: estimated employees in employment; the unemployed; the self-employed; the armed forces; participants on work-related schemes.

(2) There are two forms of assisted area status; a more intense form, development area (DA) and a less intense, intermediate area (IA).

(3) The building block for the assisted areas map is the travel-to-work area (TTWA), which is the best approximation available to a self-contained labour market. TTWA boundaries do not always correspond to regional boundaries, so some of the TTWAs are listed above under one region, while in fact belonging to several regions.

(4) Only half of the Manchester TTWA has assisted area status, but the work force reported above relates to the whole TTWA. This is because of the lack of availability of post-census work force data for areas smaller than TTWAs.

ENERGY

Radiation

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what action will be taken to ensure that safety limits in relation to radiation exposure are lowered at nuclear establishments in Great Britain.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Dose limits and radiation protection standards apply to all workers across the European Community who work with ionising radiation, including those in the nuclear industry. The directive that sets these standards—European Community directive 80/836/EURATOM—as amended by 84/467/EURATOM, is implemented in the United Kingdom by the Ionising Radiations Regulations 1985—IRR 85—and the mirror Northern Ireland legislation. These contain both statutory limits and requirements to carry out investigations at lower levels.

Last year, the Health and Safety Commission published part 4 of the approved code of practice supporting IRR 85 which contains additional guidance on restriction of exposure, but no change of statutory dose limit, to take account of recent revisions of the risk estimates from exposure to ionising radiation. This is an interim measure, pending revision of the European Community directive and subsequent revision of IRR 85 over the next few years.

Coal Production

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how much coal is mined per head of population in each Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development country and member state of the European Community.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The information is as follows:

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how much coal is mined per head of population in Wales; and what was the equivalent figure in 1976, 1981 and 1986.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Coal production per head of population in Wales in the years 1976, 1981, 1986 and 1990 was:

1976	4·1
1981	4·2
1986	3·8
1990	2·5

Atomic Energy Authority, Harwell

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy which materials in use at the Atomic Energy Authority establishment at Harwell are covered by Euratom safeguards.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Uranium, thorium and plutonium are used at Harwell for civil purposes. In accordance with articles 77 and 197 of the Euratom treaty, all these materials are subject to Euratom safeguards.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy which buildings at the Atomic Energy Authority establishment at Harwell are covered by the tripartite International Atomic Energy Agency/Euratom/UK safeguards agreement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: For security reasons it is not our policy to disclose which buildings at nuclear establishments contain nuclear material. All civil nuclear material at Harwell and other establishments is subject to Euratom safeguards and to the terms of the UK-Euratom-International Atomic Energy Agency tripartite agreement.

Electricity Prices

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on his meeting with the Major Energy Users Council as regards (a) the agenda, (b) the alternatives reviewed and (c) the outcome; and what assessment he has made of the impact of electricity prices in the next financial year on the large electricity consumers.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Basingstoke (Mr. Hunter) on Thursday 13 February 1992, Official Report, column 588.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Customs Allowances

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his most recent estimate of revenue losses the Treasury can expect from an increase in personal allowances from 300 duty-paid cigarettes to (a) 800 duty-paid cigarettes and (b) 800 duty-paid cigarettes and 1 km of hand-rolling tobacco and 400 cigars, following the relaxation of intra-Community customs barriers in 1993.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Travellers' allowances are due to be abolished from 1 January 1993 as part of the single market programme. The quantities referred to in the question are minimum indicative levels which have been agreed by the Council as part of a set of rules to enable member states to help distinguish commercial from private importations.

Considerable uncertainty must surround any estimate of the revenue effect of such a large relaxation of constraints on duty paid shopping. We have no estimates for the likely revenue loss from individual tobacco products. However, on the basis of the little evidence that is available, we estimate an annual loss from cross border shopping for all excise products, including alcoholic drinks, to be in the region of £½ billion. Most of this loss is associated with cigarettes.

VAT Registrations

Mrs. Currie: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list for the past five years the number of new VAT registrations in south Derbyshire, taking into account changes in the VAT registration limit.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The local VAT office in Derbyshire covers, in addition to the constituency of Derbyshire, South, parts of Leicestershire and Staffordshire. The number of VAT registrations processed by that office in the last five years is as follows:

Year	New registrations
1988	2,483
1989	2,847
1990	2,370
1991	1,869

Foreign Fishing Vessels

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will take steps to ensure that owners and crews of foreign fishing vessels, registered in Britain and catching fish on British quotas, pay tax.

Mr. Maude: In general, tax is already payable by the owners and crews of foreign fishing vessels on the British register if they are resident in the United Kingdom for tax purposes or, in the case of the owners, if their profits arise through a permanent establishment in this country.

The Inland Revenue has liaison arrangements with both the Registry of Shipping and Seamen and Companies House to ensure that, as far as possible, owners or crews pay any United Kingdom tax which may be due.

Customs

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the security classification of Customs and Excise documents found in a desk bought from second-hand dealers in Scarborough in January; and what other Customs and Excise documents were found on the premises when officers from his Department inspected other desks that had been sent for disposal by the Customs and Excise; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The documents were not classified. All of the remaining furniture sold to the second-hand dealer was immediately examined at his premises. No further documents were found.

Income Statistics

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people in work and responsible for children will have earnings below the tax threshold in the current year.

Mr. Maude: It is estimated that approximately 0·5 million families with earned income and with children are not liable to income tax in 1991-92. These estimates are based on a projection of the 1990 family expenditure survey and are therefore provisional.

Personal Wealth

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish the current level of personal wealth per head of population in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) Wales.

Mr. Maude: In 1989, the most recent year available, the average marketable wealth as defined in section 11 of "Inland Revenue Statistics 1991", for the adult population, was £35,800 for the United Kingdom. I regret that figures for Wales are not available.

Car Boot Sales

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has of the annual turnover of car boot sales; and what representation he has received on their taxation.

Mr. Maude: Figures are not available, and I have not received any such representations.

EC (Net Contributors)

Mr. Allason: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which countries were net contributors to the European Community in 1991, or the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Maude: The latest information available is contained in the European Court of Auditors report for 1990. It gives information on member states' gross contributions and information on some 85 per cent. of receipts, with administration and research the main elements of internal expenditure excluded. The Court of Auditors report shows that in 1990 Germany, France and the United Kingdom were significant net contributors. Italy, Belgium and Luxembourg are also shown as net contributors, but none of them was likely to be in practice after taking account of expenditure excluded from the report. All other member states were net recipients.

Duty-free Limits

Mr. Butler: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he intends to increase the duty-free limit for holidaymakers returning from outside the European Community.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The travellers' allowances for goods obtained outside the European Community are provided for under European Community legislation. There are quantitative allowances for tobacco products, wine, spirits, perfume and toilet water and a money allowance for all other goods which currently stands at £32. The Government have long been in favour of a substantial increase in the £32 allowance, but it has not so far been possible to obtain the necessary agreement of all member states. The Government will continue to press the point.

Tax Rates

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the average and marginal tax rate including income tax and statutory social insurance payments of a single person, a married couple, and a family consisting of a married couple plus two children earning in total (a) half,

(b) three quarters, (c) average earnings, (d) 1·5 times, (e) twice, (f) three times, (g) five times and (h) 10 times average earnings, in each of the 12 EC member states.

Mr. Maude: Information for 1991-92 relating to the United Kingdom is given in the table.

Income tax and national insurance contributions at multiples of average earnings

[1] Average earnings are taken to be the average gross weekly earnings of full-time males on adult rates with pay unaffected by absence. These are estimated to be £329·90 per week in 1991-92 using the Government Actuary's Department assumption of 7·75 per cent. growth in whole economy underlying earnings over 1990-91 as published in the 1991 Autumn Statement.

[2] National insurance contributions are at the standard Class 1 rate for employees not contracted-out of the state additional (earnings related) pension scheme. The tax figures assume that no allowances or reliefs are available other than the standard allowances.

Similar information on the other EC member states is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Some of the information requested is, however, obtainable from "The Tax/Benefit Position of Production Workers 1987-1990" published by the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development. A copy is available in the Library.

EC Budget

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the financial contributions made by each member state in £ sterling to the European Community and their net receipts under European Community expenditure in each of the last five years.

Mr. Maude: Member states' gross contributions to the European Community budget for the last five years for which outturn information is available were as follows:

Full details of member states' receipts are not published. However the 1990 Court of Auditors report allocates some 85 per cent. of budgetary payments, the main items of internal expenditure excluded are administration and research. It gives receipts over the last five years for which information is available as follows:

Cider

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he is taking to protect the interests of the British cider industry from proposals made by the European Commission.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 17 February 1992]: Current Commission proposals place cider with either still or sparkling wine for taxation purposes. The proposals have yet to come before the Council of Ministers and their adoption would require unanimity. The Government have already assured the United Kingdom cider industry that we will support their case for treating cider and perry as a separate tax category.

Privatisation

Mr. Beith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list (a) outstanding instalments from earlier flotations of nationalised industries or governmental holdings in privatised companies, (b) the market value of each such instalment on 1 January, (c) what revenue he currently expects to receive from each instalment and (d) when he expects to receive the revenue from each particular instalment.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 17 February 1992]: The table shows, for each outstanding instalment, the share offer, the month in which payment is due and the expected proceeds. No market value can be given for an outstanding instalment, as none exists until the share price listing is amended by the stock exchange to reflect the imminent payment of such an instalment.

Outstanding instalments from the sale of shares

Share offer	Month of receipt	Expected proceeds (£ million)
Scottish Electricity Companies—second instalment	May 1992	835

Research Funding

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the level of Government civil research and development funding as a percentage of total Government expenditure in each year since 1979.

Mr. Maples [holding answer 17 February 1992]: The available information is as follows:

Government civil research and development expenditure as a percentage of total central Government expenditure

Year	Per cent.
1980-81	2·4
1981-82	2·5

1986-87	2·2
1987-88	2·2

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the level of research funding of every Government Department in real and constant prices in each year since 1979.

Mr. Maples [holding answer 17 February 1992]: The available information from 1981 is given in tables 1.2.1 and 1.2.2 of the "Annual Review of Government Funded Research and Development 1991", a copy of which is in the Library of the House. Detailed departmental information on a comparable basis for earlier years could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Gibraltar

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was Her Majesty's Government's contribution in cash and kind to the economy of Gibraltar in the current and previous financial years.

Mr. Garel-Jones: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minister of State for the Armed Forces on 14 February. In addition to the MOD's contribution, the ODA's expenditure in Gibraltar will be £950,000 in this financial year. For 1990-91 it was £948,000. The bulk is capital aid; the remainder, funds for technical co-operation, for example, consultants' expertise. During the two years in question the diplomatic wing provided £63,370 for various small projects, principally police and customs training courses and equipment. We are unable to put a precise figure on the value to Gibraltar's economy of our general administrative assistance and advice.

Iran

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has about the number of judicial executions carried out in Iran last year.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: According to Amnesty International's most recent information, there have been 775 executions in Iran in 1991.

Montreal Protocol

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the states which have (i) signed, (ii) ratified or (iii) acceded to the Montreal protocol on substances that deplete the ozone layer.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The following states have signed, ratified, acceded to or accepted the Montreal protocol on substances that deplete the ozone layer as indicated (s = signed; r = ratified; Ac = acceded; At = accepted; Ap = approved):

EC Committee of the Regions

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the consultation procedures he proposes in order to establish the proper means of representation for the United Kingdom on the committee of the regions.

Mr. Garel-Jones: We are considering the arrangements for appointing the United Kingdom members to the committee, which will be convened only after the treaty on political union enters into force.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the United Kingdom has signed the protocol on the committee of the regions annexed to the Maastricht treaty under article 198(a)-(c).

Mr. Garel-Jones: Yes. This protocol forms in integral part of the European Community treaty and was therefore covered by the signatures of the treaty on European union by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs and my hon. Friend the Financial Secretary to the Treasury.

Arms Exports

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what impact the Gulf war has had on his Department's monitoring of the export of weapons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: All export licence applications for the export of weapons to any destination have always been, and remain, subject to rigorous scrutiny.

Vietnamese Migrants

Sir William Shelton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Vietnamese migrants.

Mr. Hurd: On 12 February, 36 illegal immigrants were repatriated from Hong Kong on the third mandatory flight under the orderly repatriation programme of 29 October 1991. They had all been screened out under procedures approved by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees—UNHCR—and were returned to Vietnam in accordance with international practice. The operation went smoothly.

The first phase of the orderly repatriation programme agreed with the Vietnamese Government on 29 October has succeeded in reducing the camp population in Hong Kong, encouraging migrants already there to return to Vietnam and stopping the flow of arrivals to Hong Kong. The camp population in Hong Kong has fallen from a peak on 5 October 1991 of 64,314 to 58,762 now. Whereas 20,163 Vietnamese arrived in Hong Kong in the first 10 months of 1991, only 45 arrived in November and December. Only four have arrived so far in 1992. In the first 10 months of 1991 an average of 500 Vietnamese per month returned voluntarily to Vietnam under UNHCR auspices. In contrast, 1,900 returned voluntarily in November and 1,800 in December. So far this year UNHCR has repatriated 1,191. This is substantial progress, though the pressures on Hong Kong are still severe.

In total, more than 20,000 migrants have so far been repatriated to Vietnam under UNHCR auspices from countries of first asylum in the region. There has not been a single substantiated case of persecution. Only if migrants are returned to their country of origin can the genuine refugees be properly looked after and resettled in accordance with their international rights.

Cambodia

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contributions the United Kingdom is making towards United Nations peacekeeping operations in Cambodia.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The UK's assessed contribution towards the United Nations advance mission in Cambodia is estimated to be £500,000.

Parliamentary approval for this new service will be sought in the spring supplementary estimate for "Foreign and Commonwealth Office: other external relations vote", class II, vote 2. Pending that approval, urgent expenditure estimated at £500,000 will be met by a repayable advance from the Contingencies Fund.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Football (Arrests)

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his review of the case of the Everton football fans arrested in the vicinity of Arsenal stadium, Highbury, on 19 December 1987.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Representations made about this case are still under consideration.

Fire Services, Northumberland

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) whether he has approved the Northumberland fire authority's proposal to close the Holy Island fire station; and what consideration he has given to the implications for this proposed closure of the authority's proposal to withdraw full-time firemen from Alnwick;

(2) whether he has yet received the proposal from the Northumberland fire authority for approval of a change from full-time to a retained fire station in Alnwick.

Mr. John Patten: There is no proposal to close the Holy Island fire station, and the Northumberland county council's proposal to disband the island's volunteer fire crew remains subject to determination by the Home Secretary. No proposals for the future status of Alnwick fire station have been received. Should a change from wholetime to retained status be submitted, the implications for the provision of fire cover would be fully assessed before the Home Secretary decided whether to approve it.

Life Sentence

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what representations he has received to amend the law to make the life sentence the maximum rather than the mandatory sentence for murder;

(2) what action he intends to take in response to the House of Lords Select Committee report on murder and life imprisonment—House of Lords Paper 78 of Session 1988-89; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: My right hon. Friend keeps the mandatory life sentence for murder under review in the light of the representations which he receives from time to time. During the passage of the Criminal Justice Act 1991, Parliament endorsed the Government's view that the mandatory life sentence should remain to mark the particular heinousness of murder.

Metropolitan Police

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what will be the total cost to public funds of the Metropolitan police in 1992-93; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: As police authority for the metropolis, I have approved estimates which provide for net revenue expenditure of £1,523·043 million in 1992-93. There will be a cash limit on current expenditure of £1,478·764 million. Capital expenditure is subject to separate control.

I have also approved the issue of a precept of £135·43 per head of relevant population of Metropolitan police purposes. This is not the sum levied on individual community charge payers, but will be levied on local authorities' collection funds which include income from revenue support grant and national non-domestic rates as well as the community charge.

Compensation (Crime)

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the extent to which compensation has been awarded by the courts to victims during the most recent 12-month period for which figures are available in accordance with the powers conferred by the powers of Criminal Courts Act 1973 as amended by the Criminal Justice Act 1988; and when he intends to evaluate the effectiveness of the legislation in assisting the victims of crime.

Mr. John Patten: The table gives information on the use of compensation orders by the criminal courts in 1989, the latest year for which final figures are available. Provisional figures for 1990 are given in brackets.

Crown Court
Indictable offences	12,400	(11,900)
Summary offences[2]	400	(500)
Magistrates courts
Indictable offences	70,500	(73,600)
Summary offences[2]	43,000	(43,600)
Total	[3]126,400	(129,600)

[1] Source: Criminal Statistics 1989.
[2] The Criminal Statistics exclude summary motoring offences.
[3] All figures rounded to the nearest hundred.

The Home Office research and planning unit has been studying the use of compensation orders in the magistrates courts, including the effect of changes introduced by the Criminal Justice Act 1988. It is hoped that a report of its findings will be published later this year.

Police National Computer

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which indexes of police national computer 1 are still in use; and for how long they are to remain in use.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The following applications remain on the PNC1 equipment but are not in general use by police forces:

Fingerprint checks for court appearances in the Metropolitan Police District.
Major investigations.
Extremist crime index.
Crime pattern analysis.

The fingerprint application will be transferred to PNC2 later this year and future arrangements for the other applications are being considered. The aim is to take PNC1 out of service as soon as it is practicable to do so.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has agreed a policy with the Association of Chief Police Officers and Association of Chief Police Officers (Scotland) on the establishment of uniform criteria for the recording of HIV status on the police national computer.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: In deciding to include warning markers on health, disposition or likely behaviour in PNC records, the police must have regard to the principles underlying the Data Protection Act 1984 on the relevance and accuracy of the information. A working group is currently reviewing the existing guidance to the police about HIV.

Interpol

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list for the past five years (i) the United Kingdom's annual subscription to Interpol and (ii) any additional levies and their purpose.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The United Kingdom's annual subscription to Interpol for the last five years has been as follows:

1987-88	440,487
1988-89	428,437
1989-90	433,579
1990-91	510,109
1991-92	497,593

There are no additional levies.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans there are to enhance the facilities or services provided by the European liaison bureau of Interpol.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: It is planned to recruit as wide a representation as possible in order to ensure that the maximum number of European countries, including eastern Europe, are represented. Other ways of enhancing the service provided by the bureau are under consideration by Interpol.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the budget and current level of staffing at the European liaison bureau at Interpol headquarters; what languages are covered within the bureau; and what is the formal brief of the bureau.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The salaries and related expenses of officers seconded to the bureau are paid for by the seconding countries. The remaining costs of the bureau —for example accommodation and equipment—come from the overall Interpol secretariat budget. It is not possible therefore readily to identify the total cost of the bureau. English, French, Spanish, Greek, Italian, German and Finnish are all covered within the bureau. The brief of the bureau is to resolve difficulties and improve co-operation, and to provide a liaison service to the European countries. The bureau also provides support to the Interpol European committee and the annual European regional conference.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list, for the past five years (i) how many messages were handled by the United Kingdom national central bureau of Interpol per year and (ii) the annual maintenance costs of the United Kingdom national central bureau.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The number of messages handled by the United Kingdom national central bureau of Interpol in the last five years were:

	Number
1987	54,665
1988	59,081
1989	62,812
1990	63,483
1991	67,086

The annual running costs for the United Kingdom national central bureau in the last five years were:

1987-88	1,490,768
1988-89	1,538,949
1989-90	1,678,302
1990-91	1,836,588
[1]1991-92	2,927,000

[1] The figure for 1991-92 is an estimate. It includes VAT for 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92 which had not been paid in earlier years.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans there are to establish computer linkages between the United Kingdom national central bureau and Interpol headquarters.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The automated search facility is being set up at Interpol headquarters in Lyon. This will have a selected data base of information of wanted persons and criminals of international importance which will be available to direct search from national central bureaux in member countries.

Europol

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans there are to establish (a) a central computerised databank for Europol and (b) a data protection authority to monitor the use and collation of data by Europol.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Europol drugs unit will be the first element of Europol to be established and work is in hand to identify both the data requirements of the unit and any necessary equipment for the storage of data. The need for data protection is recognised and consideration is currently being given to the establishment of a data protection regime for the unit acceptable to the participating member states and capable of expansion to cover all aspects of Europol as the organisation develops.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if data held by Europol will be subject to the Council of Europe's recommendation R (87) 15 of 17 September 1987 relating to the use of personal data in the police sector.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The data protection regime for Europol is currently under consideration. The United Kingdom is fully involved in this work. We shall seek to ensure that the procedures adopted are consistent with the Data Protection Act 1984 and recommendation (87)15, subject only to the United Kingdom's reserves on articles 2.2 and 2.4 of that recommendation.

Charities (Europe)

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has had and intends to have with representatives of voluntary organisations and the Charity Commission over the proposal by the European Commission for a statute for European associations.

Mr. John Patten: I understand that the Commission has approved proposals for a statute for European associations but that the texts have not yet been formally promulgated. My officials, and those of the Charity Commission, have had informal discussions on the draft proposals and we shall want to consult widely once we have the formal texts.

Police Intelligence

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to establish a computer interface between the police national computer and the Schengen information system computer; when this will occur; and what elements of police intelligence will be exchanged between the systems.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: There are no such plans. The provision of a European information system was considered at the European Council at Maastricht in December 1991. The following extract from the conclusions of the European Council is relevant:

"The European Council requests the Co-ordinators to examine what the structure of the European Information System should be and to take care that the technical and legal provisions—including the protection of personal privacy—are being taken to build the system. In view of the need for a speedy conclusion of these activities, it is desirable in the first place to establish whether the arrangements already existing between certain Member States may also apply to all the Member States."

Motoring Fines

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total amount paid in fines in respect of motoring offences for the most recent 12-month period for which figures are available; and what was the amount paid in respect of fines for all other civil and criminal offences.

Mr. John Patten: The total income from fines, fees and fixed penalties collected by magistrates courts in England and Wales in 1990-91 was £269,088,000. Figures for motoring offences are not separately recorded.

Community Charge

Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what changes in the law he proposes to introduce to facilitate the consideration by magistrates courts of applications for liability orders in community charge proceeding.

Mr. Portillo [pursuant to his answer, 28 January 1992 column 473]: To assist authorities further we are prepared to consider, in response to an application by an authority, granting an increase in its aggregate credit limit for 1992-93 to cover those unpaid 1990-91 community charges which it expects to collect during 1992-93. This is in recognition that some authorities may need a longer period to recover uncollected 1990-91 charges, and will enable such an authority to continue to borrow to cover those debts until it collects them during the course of next year.

PRIME MINISTER

Bromley

Q10. Mr. Sims: To ask the Prime Minister if he has any plans to visit the London borough of Bromley.

The Prime Minister: I am making plans for a series of visits to all parts of the country and hope to include Kent among them.

Underground Nuclear Explosions

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Prime Minister if a member of his foreign affairs staff attended the seminar on the detection and recognition of underground nuclear explosions held at the Geological Society, London, on 14 February; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Yes, along with experts from the Ministry of Defence seismological centre at Blacknest. We welcome opportunities for constructive discussion of these issues. The United Kingdom has, therefore, been participating actively in related work in the conference on disarmament in Geneva.

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 18 February.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

Constituencies

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Prime Minister what is the average constituency electorate in (a) Great Britain and (b) the United Kingdom.

Mr. Dorrell: I have been asked to reply.

The United Kingdom constituencies with largest and smallest parliamentary electorates in 1991 were as follows:

	Number
Largest
Isle of Wight	101,784
Eastleigh	91,871
Huntingdon	91,779
East Hampshire	91,519
The Wrekin	90,980
Swindon	90,343
Smallest
Tweeddale, Ettrick and Lauderdale	39,608
Glasgow Provan	37,838
Meirionnydd Nant Conwy	32,754
Orkney and Shetland	31,355

	Number
Caithness and Sutherland	31,120
Western Isles	23,073

The average parliamentary constituency electorates in 1991 were 66,908 in the United Kingdom and 66,915 in Great Britain (counting Milton Keynes as two constituencies in both cases). Corresponding information relating to the 1992 registers is not yet available.

TRANSPORT

A40

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will install traffic lights on the A40 Green road roundabout, Headington, Oxford.

Mr. Chope: We intend to carry out during the 1992-93 financial year a substantial remodelling of the roundabout which should provide it with sufficient traffic capacity until our proposed major A40 Headington improvement scheme can be put in place. This does not involve the installation of traffic signals.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will hold a public inquiry with the A40 road proposals north of Headington.

Mr. Chope: A public inquiry for the proposed A40 Headington improvement will be held after publication of draft statutory orders if the draft orders are subject to objection.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish all environmental, financial and road traffic forecasts relevant to the A40 road proposals north of Oxford, including those relating to alternative options considered.

Mr. Chope: An environmental statement will be published for the A40 north of Oxford scheme when draft statutory orders are published. The statement will include reference to alternative options considered. Road traffic forecasts and estimated scheme costs will also be available at that stage.

Road Planning

Mr. Mudd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on his Department's progress in reducing planning times for new roads, as recommended by the 15th report on road planning by the Committee of Public Accounts (Session 1988-89).

Mr. Chope: The Department has implemented several measures to reduce the planning time for new roads, including the streamlining of procedures and the introduction of new forms of contracts for consultants engaged in design. These have enabled the Department to meet its target, noted by the Committee of Public Accounts in 1989, of reaching public consultation within three years rather than five years of a decision to put a scheme into the road programme. The Department is now assessing ways in which the best project management practice of the private sector can be applied to further speed up progress on road schemes.

Traffic Flows

Mr. Mudd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the latest traffic flow figures for all links in the motorway network where the flows are in excess of 80,000 vehicles per day.

Mr. Chope: The latest figures from the national traffic census are as follows. Apart from the M25, these are approximate estimates derived from a single 12-hour count per link undertaken some time between 1985 and 1990.

Bridge, Portrack

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if it is his policy to maintain a high level bridge over the River Tees at Portrack following the permanent closing of the Cannon Park lifting bridge; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: Yes we intend to maintain the trunk road high level bridge over the River Tees. The Cannon Park, Newport, lifting bridge is the responsibility of the local highway authority, Cleveland county council. It is our understanding that this bridge will remain open as a road bridge.

Supplementary Grant Schemes

Mr. Prescott: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the expected level of expenditure on committed transport supplementary grant schemes in the years (a) 1993-94, (b) 1994-95 and (c) 1995-96.

Mr. Rifkind: According to local highway authorities transport policies and programme submissions for 1992-93, the total figures forecast for major schemes accepted for transport supplementary grant are £466 million, £301 million and £136 million respectively.

Diesel-powered Cars

Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what initiatives his Department proposes to encourage greater use of diesel-powered cars.

Mr. Chope: There is less tax on diesel fuel than petrol. The greater fuel economy of diesel cars also acts as a considerable incentive to purchasers. The cost of adding catalysts to petrol cars will also reduce or remove their price advantage and provide a further incentive to the purchase of diesel cars.

Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the EC agreed standards of emissions of oxides of nitrogen from diesel-powered cars.

Mr. Chope: EC directive 91/441/EEC, which takes effect on all new cars sold from 31 December 1992, applies a single standard for the combined sum of hydrocarbons —HC—and oxides of nitrogen—NOx. The limit value for HC + NOx applicable to type-approval testing is 0·97g/km, and that for conformity of production testing is 1·13g/km. It does not differentiate between petrol and diesel cars in the application of this standard, except to allow a derogation up to 31 December 1994 for cars fitted with a diesel engine of the direct injection type, which may exceed the limit value by 40 per cent. The directive, which will mean that all new petrol-engined cars will have to be fitted with three-way catalysts, will make a substantial contribution to the Government's objective of improving local air quality.

Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what advice he has received concerning the role of the diesel-powered car in reducing carbon dioxide emissions.

Mr. Chope: The Government have been advised by the motor industry that a shift towards the greater use of diesel cars could offer immediate benefits in terms of carbon dioxide reduction in the order of 15 to 20 per cent. per vehicle. Diesel vehicles will, however, continue to produce higher emissions of particulates and are likely to offer less scope for reductions in NOx emissions than catalyst-equipped petrol cars.

M3 Extension

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received concerning the extension of the M3.

Mr. Chope: The Department has continued to receive representations both in support of and against the planned extension of the M3 around Winchester.

"Buses Mean Business"

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what portion of the £10 million special funding from his Department for demonstration projects submitted in response to the "Buses Mean Business" report, announced on 16 December 1991, he intends to award to Scottish bus companies.

Mr. Freeman: The £10 million announced on 16 December 1991 is to fund specific English local authority bus priority schemes over the next two years. Bus priority schemes in Scotland are a matter for the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Traffic Flow, Leicestershire

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will supply traffic flow figures in both directions, and the dates for each census taken, for (a) the A47 between Houghton on the Hill and the beginning of Bushby, (b) the A47 between Bushby and Springfield lane, (c) Spencefield lane from the A47 to the Downing drive junction, (d) Spencefield lane from the Downing drive junction to Goodwood road/Marydene drive, (e) Spencefield lane from Marydene drive/Goodwood road junction to Church road, (f) High street/Evington lane to the Waterley road/Stoughton drive junction, (g) Stoughton drive from Evington lane to the roundabout on Gartree road, (h) Goodwood road from the A47 to the junction of Spencefield lane, (i) Downing drive from the A47 to the junction at Spencefield lane and (j) Whitehall road from its junction at Spencefield lane to Ethel road.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 17 February 1992]: The traffic flows on the A47 trunk road between the city boundary and Houghton on the Hill are:

(i) A47 at the junction with Downing drive on 12 June 1990—7 am to 7 pm
6,950 vehicles travelling to Leicester
6,724 vehicles travelling to Uppingham

(ii) A47 near the junction with Station road on 26 June 1991—7 am to 7 pm
6,122 vehicles travelling to Leicester
6,772 vehicles travelling to Uppingham

(iii) A47 at Bushby on 11 April 1991—7 am to 7 pm
5,607 vehicles travelling to Leicester
6,114 vehicles travelling to Uppingham

(iv) A47 west of Bushby on 17 October 1991—7 am to 7 pm
5,396 vehicles travelling to Leicester
5,878 vehicles travelling to Uppingham

The other traffic flow figures requested are on local roads for which Leicestershire county council, as the highway authority, is responsible.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the estimated increased traffic flow figures within the east of Leicester (a) upon completion of the Leicester western bypass, (b) one year after completion and (c) five years after completion.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 17 February 1992]: There is no forecast increase in traffic flows within the east of Leicester arising from the construction of the Leicester western bypass. Thereafter, traffic flows are expected to increase in line with national forecasts. However, in urban situations, other factors such as development proposals could influence future flows.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the estimated increased traffic flow figures along (a) the A47 towards Peterborough and (b) A6 Great Glen because of the completion of the Leicester western bypass.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 17 February 1992]: No increase in traffic flows along these roads is predicted as a rresult of Leicester western bypass.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will instruct Travers Morgan to extend its brief on the Leicester eastern bypass to include the Henwood proposals from the A46 north to the M1 south.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 17 February 1992]: No. The consultants' brief is to investigate possible routes to connect the A46 to the A6 to remove through traffic from the urban areas of Leicester. Traffic wishing to leave the A46 north of Leicester to join the M1 will use the Leicester western bypass when complete.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how predicted traffic flows on the Leicester eastern district distributor road would be affected if the Henwood proposals for a Leicester bypass were implemented.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 17 February 1992]: The prediction of traffic flows on the Leicester eastern district distributor road is a matter for the local highway authority, Leicestershire county council.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will carry out origin/destination surveys on traffic using (a) Spencefield lane, (b) Goodwood road, (c) Stoughton drive and (d) Stoughton drive south, in the city of Leicester.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 17 February 1992]: No. These roads are the responsibility of the local highway authority, Leicestershire county council.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will supply traffic flow figures in both directions and the dates for each census taken, for (a) the A6 between Stoughton road, Leicester and the race course, (b) the A6 between the race course and the traffic lights at New street, (c) the A6 between the traffic lights at New street and Great Glen, (d) Stoughton drive south, (e) from the traffic lights at New street on the A6 Oadby to Stoughton road/Gartree road junction and (f) Palmerston way between the race course roundabout and the Welford road.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 17 February 1992]: The traffic flows on the A6 trunk road between the city boundary and Great Glen are:

(i) A6 with the junction of Victoria court, Oadby on 14 May 1991—(7 am to 7 pm)
9,854 vehicles travelling to Great Glen
9,981 vehicles travelling to Leicester

(ii) A6 with the junction of New street, Oadby on 19 June 1990—(7 am to 7 pm)
2,810 vehicles travelling to Great Glen
4,235 vehicles travelling to Leicester

(iii) A6 with the junction of Gorse lane on 27 June 1991—(7 am to 7 pm)
7,597 vehicles travelling to Great Glen
7,943 vehicles travelling to Leicester

The other traffic flow figures requested are on local roads for which Leicestershire county council, as the highway authority are responsible.

Air Pollution, Oadby

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the present air pollution levels on the A6 at Oadby (a) at the race course roundabout and (b) at the Victoria Court flats; and by how much they are expected to increase if the Leicester eastern district distributor road is built.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 17 February 1992]: The information requested is not available.

Tyres

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consultation his Department had with the European Commission on tyre tread depth prior to the adoption of EC directive 89/459.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 11 February 1992]: The Department of Transport was consulted by the European Commission on tyre tread depth in 1986. The Department, which had recently carried out a review of the issue, reported that it was satisfied with the operation of the national laws then in force, and that the proposed change would not greatly benefit road safety while imposing an unacceptable increase in cost on the motorist.

As my right hon. Friend the Member for Southend, West (Mr. Channon) reported to the House on 7 June 1989, Official Report, columns 142-43, the United Kingdom voted against the measure, but it was adopted by other member states on the basis of qualified majority voting.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what evidence he has on the effect of tyre tread depth on road safety and the number of accidents.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 11 February 1992]: Although it is recognised that an increase in legal tread depth brings about an all-round improvement in the condition of worn tyres on the road, research carried out to date has indicated that illegal tyre tread depth is a main contributory factor in less than 1 per cent. of accidents.

Tyre tread depth differences in the range 1 to 2 mm would only make a significant difference to braking distances at speeds of 50 mph or more in wet weather on smooth surfaces. Only a very small proportion of accidents occur in these conditions.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Citizens Charter

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on his Ministry's contribution to the citizens charter.

Mr. Gummer: Principles such as those in the citizens charter have particularly guided this Ministry's programme for the past two years. I refer the hon. Gentleman to the establishment of the food safety directorate, the consumer panel, regular meetings with consumer organisations, and the announcement of a review of flood defence and coastal protection with those concerned, including environmental organisations.

As I indicated on appointment, this is a consumer Ministry. I have already announced the restructuring of our regional organisation to make it more effective in meeting the requirements of one important group of customers.

The citizens charter principles will be taken forward in the Ministry and its agencies.

Bananas

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what are the implications for African, Caribbean and Pacific countries' bananas of the compromise text on agriculture in the GATT negotiations put forward on 20 December 1991;

(2) what account he took of the banana protocol of the Lomé convention in considering the draft compromise for the final agreement on the GATT-Uruguay round of negotiations put forward on 20 December 1991;

(3) what changes have taken place in Government policy with regard to the United Kingdom's traditional banana suppliers in the Caribbean since the commitments made by the former Prime Minister in Jamaica in 1987.

Mr. Curry: The draft text circulated by the GATT Director General on 20 December 1991 covered all products. It remains under negotiation and it is at present not clear what final agreement may be reached, nor whether the Community will wish to deal with bananas on the same basis as other products. The impact of tariffication on ACP banana industries would depend on the size of any tariffs proposed and on the precise terms of any provisions for maintaining current access opportunities. We remain committed to fulfilling our obligations under the Lomé convention and to bringing the GATT round to an early and successful conclusion.

Fish (Intervention Scheme)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received on the withdrawal of the intervention scheme as it relates to fish.

Mr. Curry: The withdrawal arrangements are a permanent and integral feature of the basic Community marketing regime for fish.

Water Quality

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 3 February, Official Report, column 80, regarding the implementation of EC directive 91/492/EC, if he will specify the date on which he expects the classification work to be completed.

Mr. Curry: Under EC directive 91/492/EEC, classification of shellfish harvesting areas must be operative by 1 January 1993. I appreciate that shellfish producers will need the longest possible warning of the likely classifications, and we will publish results at the earliest possible date.

"World Rainforest Report"

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will obtain for the library of the Overseas Development Administration a subscription to the "World Rainforest Report", published by the World Rainforest Movement.

Mrs. Chalker: The library of the Overseas Development Administration already subscribes to this publication.

Environmental Appraisal

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many copies of the Overseas Development Administration's manual of environmental appraisal have been produced; and to which organisations the manual has been distributed.

Mrs. Chalker [holding answer 14 February 1992]: More than 1,800 copies of the manual have been produced; a list of the organisations the manual has been distributed to has been placed in the Libraries of the House.

Energy Grants

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what grants have been made by his Department's Overseas Development Administration since 1979 to support (i) energy efficiency, (ii) nuclear power and (iii) pollution abatement in industrially developing nations.

Mrs. Chalker [holding answer 14 February 1992]: I have placed in the Libraries of the House lists of grants funded by the Overseas Development Administration from 1980 to 1990 in the fields of energy efficiency and pollution abatement. No grants in the nuclear power sector were made. Records available, which cover capital grants for the whole period and technical co-operation grants from 1988 only, show that during the period a total of approximately £26 million has been spent on pollution abatement projects and approximately £234 million on energy efficiency-related projects.

HEALTH

Ear, Nose and Throat Operations

13. Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made in reducing the waiting time for ear, nose and throat operations in the past 12 months.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The latest information shows that in the year to March 1991 the number of patients waiting over two years for ENT treatments fell by 50 per cent. and the number waiting over one year by 24 per cent.

Extra-contractual Referrals

15. Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the adequacy of the system of extra-contractual referrals as a means of ensuring patient choice and general practitioner freedom of referral.

Mr. Waldegrave: I am satisfied that extra contractual referrals are working effectively in dealing with smaller patient flows. Expenditure on extra contractual referrals is running in line with plan.

Hilda Lewis House

16. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions he has had about the proposed closure of Hilda Lewis house; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The Bethlem Royal hospital and the Maudsley hospital special health authority has decided to restructure the services for children with both learning difficulties and behavioural problems which it currently provides at Hilda Lewis house. This will better enable the authority to fulfil its key role in postgraduate research and teaching. The authority is best placed to make this kind of decision about its strategic priorities, which it has also discussed with the NHS management executive.

Bloomsbury and Islington Health Authority

17. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received concerning possible trust status for any part of the Bloomsbury and Islington health authority.

Mr. Dorrell: We have received an expression of interest in trust status from April 1993 from the Whittington and Royal Northern hospitals. We have received an application from the Royal London homoeopathic hospital, which is resubmitting from the second wave. We have also received an expression of interest from St. Peter's, St. Paul's, St. Philip's and the Shaftesbury hospitals, which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has not approved to make an application.

Patients Charter

18. Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what waiting list targets have been set under the patients charter.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: From 1 April 1992, the patients charter guarantees that no patient will wait more than two years for treatment. The charter also requires health authorities to set and publish clear local standards for waiting time for first out-patient appointments.

National Health Service Trusts

19. Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on progress by national health service hospital trusts.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Recently my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced that 99 hospitals and other units will be established in the second wave of national health service trusts in April 1992, while four London teaching hospitals will become operational as trusts in April 1993.

To date, 153 hospitals and other units have indicated that they may apply to become trusts in April 1993. If all these were to be successful, two thirds of national health service hospitals and other units would be operating as national health service trusts.

First-wave national health service trusts across the country have already made significant improvements in the care they can offer their patients.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in the first wave of trust hospitals how many executive directors were appointed following advertisements and competitive interviews and how many were appointed without competition; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not collected centrally. The appointment of executive directors is a matter for the National Health Service Trust Board in accordance with the National Health Service Trusts (Membership and Procedure) Regulations and the Department's guidance which states that the post of chief executive must be advertised except when the trust is first established.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been his Department's total expenditure to date on the introduction of national health service trusts.

Mr. Dorrell: Figures are not available, but the cost is not significant and will be more than offset by the improvements in efficiency in delivering the service.

General Practitioner Contracts

20. Sir Fergus Montgomery: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the impact of the general practitioner contract.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The general practitioner contract has revolutionised primary health care. As a direct result of this initiative, general practitioners all over the country now offer patients a wider range of services than ever before and patient satisfaction levels are high.

Surgeries now offer more preventive care and give special emphasis to vulnerable patients like young children and the elderly.

These improvements amply illustrate the very positive impact of the general practitioner contract, and the Government's commitment to improving the health of the whole population.

Pain Relief

21. Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to improve and extend the relief of pain.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The provision of services for the diagnosis and relief of pain is a matter for individual health authorities to determine.

Electoral Registration

22. Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the total number of electors registered for England and Wales for 1992-93; and what is the equivalent relevant population of those who are entitled to register.

Mr. Dorrell: The size of the 1992 electoral register is not yet known. It is estimated that there were about 40·4 million residents of England and Wales at mid-1991 old enough to be included on this register.

Mersey RHA

23. Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he plans to meet the chairman of the Mersey regional health authority to discuss changes planned in national health service provision.

Mr. Dorrell: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State meets regional chairmen on a regular basis. A wide range of topics on the national health service are discussed at these meetings.

Social Services

24. Mr. James Lamond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what response he intends to make to the policy forum report on spending on social services.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Local authorities have a challenging job to provide services which are flexible, comprehensive and sensitive to the needs of users and carers. Our record which has seen personal social services spending increase by nearly 60 per cent. in real terms since 1978-79 shows that we are committed to providing local authorities with the resources to do so.

NHS Charges

25. Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance he has issued to health authorities regarding the imposition of charges on NHS patients.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: National health services must be free except where charging is expressly provided for by legislation. The chief executive reminded health service managers of this on 24 October 1991.

GP Lists

26. Mr. Day: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the average number of patients on each general practitioner's list (a) in 1978 and (b) in 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The average list size fell from 2,312 in October 1978 to 1,942 in October 1990—a reduction of 16 per cent.

The latest available information held centrally shows that the average list size at 1 April 1991 was 1,917, a further reduction of 1·3 per cent.

GP Fund Holders

27. Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what independent reports have been issued about the progress of general practitioner fund holding.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Kings Fund report on GP fund holding—"A Foothold for Fundholding"—was published on 11 February and a copy is available in the Library. We welcome this first piece of independent, academic research undertaken by Professor Howard Glennerster of the London School of Economics which shows that GP fund holding is proving to be a clear success and, most importantly, working to the benefit of patients.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 30 January, Official Report, column 668, what proportion of the general practitioner fund holders' budget for hospital services is spent outside the NHS.

Mr. Dorrell: This information is not collected centrally.

Organ Retrievals

29. Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions he has had with the United Kingdom transplant authority and regional health authorities about improving organ retrieval rates.

Mr. Dorrell: We are constantly looking at ways to improve organ retrieval rates through our regular contacts with people from a wide range of interested bodies including health authorities and the United Kingdom Transplant Support Service Authority. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State discussed this issue during a recent visit to the UKTSSA.

Waiting Lists

28. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what actions have been announced under the waiting list initiative.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have made four announcements which have given fresh impetus to our continued drive to reduce long waiting time.

First, at the start of the financial year, I announced a waiting list fund of £35 million to be used to help health authorities reduce long waiting times. A proportion of this money has been targeted at the 80 worst lists.

Secondly, in October last year, I announced publication of the patients charter, which, for the first time, gives patients a guarantee that, from 1 April 1992, they will not wait more than two years for treatment.

Thirdly, on 3 December, I announced the appointment of an experienced NHS general manager, backed by an additional £2 million, to help health authorities eliminate over two year waiters. Since then we have been able to provide a further £2 million, bringing the total waiting list fund this year to £39 million.

Finally, on 10 February, I announced that we would be providing a further £39 million waiting list fund for next year, taking the total which the Government will have provided between 1987-88 and 1992-93 to nearly £200 million.

30. Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about hospital waiting lists in the northern area.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Waiting times in the northern region continue to fall. The latest provisional figures show that since March 1991 the number of patients waiting over two years has fallen by 60 per cent. and the number waiting over one year by 15 per cent. In line with the patients charter, the region expects to have no patient waiting over two years by 31 March 1992.

Disabled People (Legislation)

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the progress in implementing the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Most of the major provisions of the Act have now been implemented, bringing substantial benefits to disabled people and their carers.

Northern General Hospital (Red Alerts)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in how many cases during the month of January was there a red alert in the Northern general hospital.

Mr. Dorrell: This information is not collected centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. Beverley Stokes, the chairman of the Northern general hospital national health service trust, for details.

National Health Service

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what are the existing requirements to provide evidence of entitlement to hospital treatment under the national health service to prevent fraudulent applications by foreign nationals and others who have not contributed financially by means of national health insurance payments; if he will review the effectiveness and fairness of the present arrangements; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what information is a prospective patient required to supply when seeking hospital treatment under the national health service to satisfy the admission staff that he or she is entitled to treatment free at the point of delivery.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Eligibility to free hospital treatment is based on residence in the United Kingdom, not on the payment of national insurance contributions or taxes. Anyone not ordinarily resident in the United Kingdom has to pay for national health service hospital treatment unless he or she is covered by one of a number of specific exemptions.

Guidance issued by the Department makes it clear that, when there is doubt about eligibility, hospital staff should ask for evidence to support a claim to exemption from charging. The information prospective patients are required to supply will vary according to the type of exemption that applies.

Health Authorities (Non-executive Directors)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many chairmen and non-executive directors of district health authorities and family health service authorities do not reside within the boundaries of the authorities to which they have been appointed; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not held centrally. We seek to appoint all chairmen of district health authorities and family health services authorities who live or work in the area covered by the authority to which they have been appointed.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what payments may be made to non-executive directors of health authorities, family health services authorities and hospital trusts in addition to the annual remuneration of £5,000; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The non-executives of NHS authorities and trusts are entitled to travelling and subsistence expenses in addition to annual remuneration of £5,000.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the differences between the responsibilities of the members of district health authorities and family health service authorities prior to appointment of the non-executive directors and those who currently hold office; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Non-executives of the new, streamlined authorities are part of a smaller management board which focuses on issues of overall strategy, policy and direction.

Cervical Smears

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average time taken by laboratories to process cervical smears; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Information is not available in the form requested. Health authorities must aim to return the results of cervical smear tests to the doctor who undertook them within one month. In December 1990 about two thirds of health authorities were meeting the one month target. As at December 1991, the latest available date, more than 96 per cent. of health authorities were meeting this target. The average processing time in those districts which were failing to meet this target was six weeks.

Childhood Vaccination

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many yellow card reports of an adverse reaction to childhood vaccination or immunisation were received in the last year for which figures are available; and how many children died.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: In 1991 there were 483 reports of suspected adverse reactions in association with immunisation of children up to the age of 16. A report of a suspected adverse reaction does not necessarily imply a causal association between the reaction, the outcome and the vaccine. Nine of those reports were deaths: research from several recent studies has shown such deaths to be temporally but not causally related to immunisation.

Cervical Cancer

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the estimated annual cost of the cervical cancer screening programme.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There is no reliable current estimate of the annual cost of the cervical screening programme. The cervical screening programme is an integral part of NHS disease prevention activity and the time and resources used to take and process smears cannot be separately identified. Payments made to GPs in connection with the target payment scheme for cervical screening are provisionally estimated to be £48·9 million in England in 1990-91.

Breast Cancer

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the estimated annual cost of the breast screening programme.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Government allocated £55 million for England—£70 million for the United Kingdom—between 1987-88 and 1990-91 to establish the breast screening programme and to contribute towards ongoing costs. In 1990-91 running costs for the breast screening programme amounted to £24 million in England. In 1991-92 the running costs are estimated to be £24·5 million in England.

NHS Expenditure

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish figures for each district health authority showing their revenue and capital allocations for NHS review expenditure in 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. Dorrell: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish table 3 of Cm 1913 adjusted for input unit costs.

Mr. Dorrell: The information requested for the hospital and community health services—HCHS—family health services and for the health service as a whole for the years 1986-87 and 1990-91 is given in the table. Information is not available in this form for other parts of the programme or for later years.

This information measures changes in total inputs at constant factor cost but ignores the continuing success of the national health service in increasing the efficiency with which it uses resources. Therefore, in order to give a complete picture, figures adjusted by the GDP deflator have also been included.

Since it has not been possible to adjust these figures for certain review-related changes, figures for 1991-92 onwards are not directly comparable with those for earlier years. The main points are:

i. Sums provided for trust debt remuneration are included in HCHS current in 1991-92 and 1992-93;
ii. Trusts' capital financed via health authorities' payments for services is included in HCHS current for 1991-92 and 1992-93;
iii. GP fund holders' expenditure on drugs is included in HCHS current in 1991-92 only.

Further explanation is given in paragraph 3.4 of the departmental report and other tables, for example, table 9 which gives the full picture of HCHS capital spending.

Expenditure figures as they appear in table 3 of Cm 1913 adjusted for changes in input unit costs and by the GDP deflator (all at 1990-91 prices)

Prescription Charges

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to increase national health service prescription charges.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Welwyn Hatfield (Mr. Evans) on 13 February, at columns 603-4.

Private Care Homes

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what instructions were given to health authority inspection and registration officers with regard to their role in (a) monitoring whether residents in private nursing homes require such care and are also receiving it, and (b) liaison with Benefits Agency staff concerning the circumstances of those residents in receipt of income support payments towards their care home fee.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Under the Registered Homes Act 1984, health authorities have a general duty to ensure that the level of care provided is sufficient to meet the needs of individual patients.

Geriatric Patients

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the latest estimate for the average weekly cost per patient of geriatric in-patient care.

Mr. Dorrell: Financial returns submitted to the Department by district health authorities in England for 1990-91 indicate the average treatment cost per geriatric in-patient to be £53 per day. This figure excludes the cost of support services and accommodation, and is provisional at this stage.

School Nurses and Health Visitors

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list for each of the last five years for each NHS region the number of (a) school nurses and (b) health visitors.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 7 February 1992]: The information requested is shown in the tables. The fluctuations in numbers reflects the substantial growth in family practitioner services. The number of general practitioners has increased by 20 per cent. since 1979. The wider range of primary care services available to children and their parents has led many health authorities to review the role of their community child health services and redirect resources towards children with special needs.

SOCIAL SECURITY

HIV

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how payments for persons infected with HIV as a result of an NHS blood transfusion or tissue transfer will be treated for the purposes of social security benefits; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: They will be treated in the same way as payments made to haemophiliacs under the Macfarlane Trusts. That is to say, they will be fully disregarded in the income-related benefits and exempted from the scheme to recover sums equivalent to the value of social security benefits from compensation payments. The confidentiality of beneficiaries will also be protected by making it unnecessary for them to report the receipt of any payment to a social security office or a local authority.

We will introduce the necessary amending regulations as soon as possible.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Assisted Places

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the average annual cost of maintaining a pupil in a private school under the assisted places scheme.

Mr. Fallon: The average cost to the Exchequer of an assisted place in the school year 1990-91, the latest year for which complete information is available, was £2,691.

Secondary Education

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his estimate of the 1991-92 cost to public funds of the education of a pupil in a local authority secondary school and in a secondary school which has opted out of local authority control.

Mr. Eggar: The funding of grant-maintained schools comprises a number of elements. The largest element, annual maintenance grant (AMG), broadly reflects the recurrent funds which the former maintaining local education authority of the school would have deployed in support of the school had it remained local education authority-maintained. Other grants to grant-maintained schools reflect the types of provision which local education authority schools receive in cash or in kind.

Student Loans

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will indicate the reasons for the variation in the provision for access funds in 1993-94 and 1994-95, relative to 1992-93, in table 1 of his departmental report on the Government's expenditure plans, Cm 1911.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The figures in the departmental report are based on the initial planned GB provision for access funds of some £15 million each year. Provision for the years 1990-91 to 1992-93 was subsequently increased. Provision for 1993-94 and 1994-95 will be reviewed in this year's public expenditure survey.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the assumptions on which the projected expenditure on student loans for 1992-93, 1993-94 and 1994-95 are based in table 1 of his departmental report on the Government's expenditure plans, Cm 1911.

Mr. Alan Howarth: As the departmental report makes clear, student loans will continue to be available for all eligible students who apply for them. The level of expenditure on loans will depend on the level of demand and the rates and conditions of loans prescribed in the statutory regulations for each year.

Table 1 in Cm 1911 sets out planned public expenditure provision for the years 1992-93, 1993-94 and 1994-95. The plans for future years will be reviewed in successive public expenditure surveys. The assumptions underlying the figures in table 1 include the following:

(i) Average student support from basic maintenance grant (disregarding any parental contribution) and loan will rise in line with the GDP deflator assumptions for the years in question;

(ii) The number of students eligible for loans will rise in line with the projected increase in the number of mandatory award holders, as shown in table 20 of the departmental report;

(iii) Take-up of the available loan facility will be 35 per cent. in each of the academic years 1991-92 and 1992-93, 45 per cent. in the academic year 1993-94 and 55 per cent. in the academic year 1994-95. Take-up in the academic year 1990-91 was some 28 per cent.;

(iv) 10 per cent. of borrowers will not have to repay their loans, because their income will never reach the deferment threshold; and

(v) 10 per cent. of the remaining 90 per cent. of borrowers will not repay their loans because they default or because their liability is cancelled on death. This is a cautious planning assumption. The Student Loans Company will pursue defaulters vigorously.

Experience in the academic year 1990-91 demonstrated how difficult it is to predict exactly what the ultimate level of take-up will be. If the above assumptions over-estimate demand, any excess provision will be surrendered to the Consolidated Fund. If, on the other hand, demand exceeds the level of provision, additional funds will be provided from the reserve. The reserve is the amount within the planning total which provides a margin for uncertainties or—as in this case—for revised estimates of demand.

Key Stage 1 Assessment

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the cost of the two-year evaluation of key stage 1 assessment, undertaken by the university of Leeds; and if he will publish the reports of the evaluation.

Mr. Eggar: The cost of this work has been £512,000 to December 1991. The School Examinations and Assessment Council will publish a final report shortly.

Teachers' Pensions Agency

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has made a decision on the establishment of the teachers' pensions agency under the "next steps" initiative.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have decided to establish the teachers' pensions agency with effect from 1 April 1992. The agency will be located in Darlington.

A framework document setting out the organisational, financial and management structure under which the agency will operate will be published at that time. The performance targets which I will set the agency will also be published.

Circular 22/89

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he plans to issue the addendum to circular 22/89.

Mr. Fallon: My right hon. and learned Friend expects to issue the addendum to circular 22/89 in the near future.

Teaching Staff, Northumberland

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the number of (a) teachers, (b) non-teaching and staff and (c) administrative staff employed in Northumberland county council.

Mr. Fallon: The number of teachers employed in nursery, primary and secondary schools in Northumberland education authority in January 1991 was 2,736. Data on education support staff and administrative staff employed in schools were collected for the first time in January 1991 but are not yet available for publication. Information on other categories of non-teaching staff in schools is not collected centrally. The Department does not collect data on administrative staff employed in Northumberland county council.

Basic Need Criteria

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish the Department's criteria which (a) a secondary school and (b) a primary school has to meet in order to qualify as a basic need case.

Mr. Fallon: Basic need is defined as the net deficit of places after account is taken of demand for, and places available, in all maintained primary schools within two miles and all maintained secondary schools within three miles, of the school at which it is intended that new places be added.

This was set out in full in my Department's letter of 30 May 1991, which invited LEAs to bid for annual capital guidelines and voluntary school capital allocations. That letter and a subsequent letter of 19 August 1991 made clear that basic need bids in 1992-93 should be for deficits of places in 1994-95 in primary schools and 1995-96 in secondary schools. It was also made clear that in assessing the availability of places in neighbouring schools, LEAs' calculations should be based on whichever was the higher of the schools' capacity or their numbers on roll in September 1992.

We are currently reviewing our basic need definitions, as we do each year in advance of the publication of the capital bidding letter. We shall take account of representations received on our methodology from LEAs and others. We have also announced that we are consulting local authority associations, voluntary bodies and grant-maintained schools on a change in our capital allocations methodology which would allow popular schools to expand notwithstanding the existence of spare places in other maintained schools in the area.

DNA Research

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will provide not less than an extra £2 million per year for the Medical Research Council to cover the British contribution to the second stage of sequencing the DNA of the nematode Caenorhabditis Elegas.

Mr. Alan Howarth: My right hon. and learned Friend and I are in touch with the chairman and secretary of the council on this issue. In this financial year the allocation to the council from this Department's science budget will total almost £203 million. The 1992-93 allocations announced in December will raise that sum to almost £219 million, excluding money transferred from the universities following changes in the dual support arrangements. This represents a 4 per cent. real terms increase on this year's funding and a 32 per cent. increase since 1979-80. It is for the council to decide on the deployment of these funds.

EMPLOYMENT

Unemployment

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people were registered as unemployed on (a) 1 January 1987 and (b) 1 January in the current year.

Mr. Jackson: In January 1987, on the consistent seasonally adjusted basis, there were 3,042,600 unemployed claimants in the United Kingdom, compared with 2,604,100 in January 1992—a fall of 438,500, or 14 per cent.

Training Costs

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has (a) to extend his proposals for new employers to obtain redress in respect of training investment by employees' previous employers to situations where companies are purchased by companies owned by foreign governments and (b) to apply the proposals retrospectively.

Mr. Jackson: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Maryhill (Mrs. Fyfe) on 14 February 1992 at column 652-53.

Jobs and Benefits Centre, Thornaby

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what progress is being made with the provision of a new integrated jobs and benefits centre in Thornaby; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: Questions on operational matters in the Employment Service executive agency are the responsibility of Mike Fogden, the agency's chief executive, to whom I have referred this question for reply.

Strikes

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the average number of days lost through strikes each year between 1974 and 1979 and between 1986 and 1991.

Mr. Forth: There were an average of 12·2 million working days lost each year between 1974 and 1979. That is nearly five times higher than the annual average between 1986 and 1991, which was 2·7 million days lost.

Training Allowances

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many young people are currently on youth training places; what are the current rates of allowances paid to 16 and 17-year-olds; when those rates were last increased; and what would be the value in 1992 prices of the original level of allowance paid in 1978.

Mr. Jackson: At 5 January 1992, the latest date for which information is available, it is estimated that there were 270,600 young people on youth training in England and Wales. The current minimum levels of the training allowance are £29·50 per week for 16-year-olds, and £35 per week for 17-year-olds. Those minimum levels of allowance were introduced in July 1988 and April 1986 respectively. Employers are strongly encouraged to supplement those allowances, and many of them do—and around one third of trainees are employed and receive a wage. The value of the original level of allowance payable in 1978 at 1992 prices is £52·89 per week.

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to improve the level of training allowances for youth training.

Mr. Jackson: The Department has no plans at present to increase minimum levels of the youth training allowance. We believe that the existing minimum levels are sufficient to meet the normal requirements of a young person living in the parental home. Trainees living independently are free to apply for income support over and above youth training minimum allowances if they consider that their income is insufficient to meet their needs. Employers, as the beneficiaries of YT, are encouraged to supplement trainee incomes. Around one third of trainees are employed and receive a wage.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

BT Engineer's Responsibilities

Mr. Mullin: To ask the chairman of the Administration Committee if he will list the responsibilities of the British Telecom engineer based at 3 Deans yard.

Mr. Orme: I shall ask the Serjeant at Arms to write to the hon. Member.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Deregulation Initiative

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the progress of the deregulation initiative.

Mr. Redwood: The deregulation initiative ensures close scrutiny of new and existing regulation and of compliance costs for business. Minimising the cost of regulation for business remains central to the Government's programme to create the conditions to promote prosperity.

In the past 12 months, Government Departments have targeted attention on certain outdated or burdensome requirements which business has identified as causing difficulty. This has yielded a number of improvements in the regulatory environment. Further requirements have been targeted for attention in the 12 months ahead.

The central deregulation unit in my Department continues to support the initiative as a whole by taking the lead on certain general issues, and by continuing to work with business to identify regulatory burdens and to co-operate with Departments to achieve good deregulatory outcomes on particular issues.

The programme of work includes action in the following areas:

Fairs and Promotions

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what use has been made of his Department's ready reckoner for staff and related costs in considering proposed staff reductions in the fairs and promotions branch of his Department.

Mr. Sainsbury: Ready reckoner data have been taken fully into account in considering staff reductions.

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) when he received a draft of the Price Waterhouse report on the future of the fairs and promotions branch in his Department; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will hold a period of consultation with affected staff in his Department after the publication of the Price Waterhouse report on the future of the fairs and promotions branch.

Mr. Sainsbury: Price Waterhouse is not involved in reporting on the future of the fairs and promotions branch.

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the number of reviews of the work of the fairs and promotions branch in his Department since 1979, the objectives of the reviews and their results.

Mr. Sainsbury: Over the period there have been 13 reviews into different aspects of the schemes and operations of the fairs and promotions branch resulting in various changes in policy and procedures. These have been notified, as appropriate, to industry and commerce.

Accounts Services Executive Agency

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the maximum salary payable to the chief executive of the Accounts Services executive agency, including peformance-related element, and the length of time of the chief executive's contract.

Mr. Leigh: The maximum salary payable to the chief executive is at present determined by reference to the standard grade 5 range on which he is paid. The range is £36,178 to £47,921, excluding London weighting, in London and £34,667 to £46,122 elsewhere. The term of the appointment is five years.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he will list those new facilities for staff, including nurseries and health-care schemes, which have been introduced in the Accounts Services executive agency since its establishment;

(2) if he will list the new forms of alternative working patterns introduced into the Accounts Services executive agency since its establishment; and if he will provide a breakdown by grade of the numbers of staff taking up each new working pattern.

Mr. Leigh: These are operational matters for the agency's chief executive. I have, therefore, asked him to write to the hon. Member.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much was spent on events and publicity surrounding the launch of the Accounts Services executive agency; and whether the cost was borne by the parent department or the new agency.

Mr. Leigh: The launch of the agency was an operational matter for its chief executive. I have therefore asked him to write to the hon. Member.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the quality-of-service performance indicators adopted by the Accounts Services executive agency since its establishment; and if he will identify separately those quality-of-service performance indicators already operative prior to the agency status.

Mr. Leigh: The agency's chief executive and his managers set and monitor their own internal management targets for performance, including quality of service measures. However, a distinctive feature of next steps has been the setting by Ministers, and a formal announcement, of targets for agencies, and publication of details of their subsequent performance.

For details of these ministerial targets for the Accounts Service executive agency I refer the hon. Member to the announcement made to the House by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on 15 October 1991, Official Report, column 128.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the first degree obtained by the chief executive of the Accounts Services executive agency; and from which university or polytechnic it was awarded.

Mr. Leigh: This question seeks personal information about an individual. I have therefore drawn it to the attention of the chief executive of the agency.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will state the cash amount per person awarded in the last year for which figures were available, and the conditions attached to its award, of the group bonus scheme operated by the Accounts Services executive agency.

Mr. Leigh: The agency has not yet introduced a group bonus scheme.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the last annual report for the Accounts Services executive agency was published; and when the next one is due.

Mr. Leigh: The first annual report for the agency is expected to be published in summer 1992.

Mr. McAllion : To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many staff were in post on the date that the Accounts Services executive agency was established; and how many are in post now.

Mr. Leigh: The numbers of staff in post on 1 October 1991, the date when the agency was established, and on 1 February 1992, were 91·5 and 89·5 respectively. These numbers represent permanent staff with part-timers counted as half. Casuals are excluded.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the post, grade and maximum salary payable, including performance-related elements, in each case where appointments have been made to the Accounts Services executive agency at grade 7 or above since its establishment.

Mr. Leigh: Of the four posts in the Accounts Services agency at grade 7 and above, one has been the subject of an appointment since its establishment. This is a grade 7 post filled by a transfer from within the Department. The maximum salary payable is determined by reference to the grade 7 pay scale. this is £24,379 to £34,667, excluding London weighting, in London and £23,329 to £33,175 elsewhere.

Short Measure Beer

Sir Charles Irving: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Chelmsford, (Mr. Burns) on 20 December 1991, at column 387, if he will list for each of the last three years (a) the number of complaints which his Department has received from members of the public regarding short measure beer and (b) the local authority trading standards departments which have submitted reports to his Department regarding short measure beer.

Mr. Leigh: My Department received three complaints from members of the public in 1989, six in 1990 and 23 in 1991. The trading standards departments which have submitted reports are Barnsley in 1989; Bedfordshire, Tayside and South Tyneside in 1990; and Surrey, Greater Manchester, St. Helens and North Yorkshire in 1991.

Funeral Costs

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will introduce proposals for legislation to require all funeral directors to publish an itemised price list of the different costs incurred in arranging a funeral.

Mr. Leigh: I agree that an itemised price list would be desirable, and am in touch with the National Association of Funeral Directors on the matter. However, my preference is always for self-regulation if this can be made effective.

Steel

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much steel is made per head of population in each OECD and European Community country.

Mr. Leigh: The information is given in the table.

Post Office

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make it his policy to introduce subsidies to maintain the current network of rural sub-post offices.

Mr. Leigh: The Government have no plans to introduce a subsidy to maintain the current network of rural post offices. This is because the Post Office is committed to maintaining a nationwide network of post offices adequate to enable it to fulfil its statutory duty to have regard to the social, commercial and industrial needs of the United Kingdom. We are content that the Post Office manages the network in full recognition of its commitment.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to bring forward legislation allowing Post Office Counters Ltd. to negotiate new business with banks, building societies and insurance companies.

Mr. Leigh: Post Office Counters' powers are set down in section 7 of the Post Office Act 1969, as amended by section 58 of the British Telecommunications Act 1981. There is provision for these powers to be extended, subject to specific ministerial consent.

The Government recognise the desire of Post Office Counters to increase its efficiency by offering its customers additional services. But we continue to be reluctant to see any extension of the public sector not least because unfair competition may result. For this reason, despite careful consideration we have not been able to approve requests from Post Office Counters for extensions to its powers. We shall nevertheless continue to consider on their merits any specific requests.

Sub-postmasters may and do offer a wide range of products in the non-post office parts of their premises, their main restriction being that these should not compete with those offered at the post office counter.

Teesside Industrial Estate

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many units have been (a) constructed and (b) let by English Estates at the Teesside industrial estate, Thornaby, since June 1987.

Mr. Leigh: The information requested is as follows:

	Let		Sold		Vacant		Total Stock
	Units	'000 m^2	Units	'000 m^2	Units	'000 m^2	Units	'000 m^2
Position June 1987	83	40	12	63	15	27	110	130
Position January 1992	74	46	31	88	18	8	123	142

In addition, terms have been agreed for lease or sale of a further five units.

Bicycles

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will abolish the requirement that United Kingdom bicycle manufacturers pay duty on imported gear and brake components.

Mr. Sainsbury: The duty payable on gear and brake components for bicycles is laid down in the European Community's common customs tariff. However, the Community's offer on tariffs in the current GATT Uruguay round negotiations does envisage a reduction in the duty paid on these products.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many Chinese bicycles were imported into the United Kingdom in each of the years from 1979 to date; what percentage they were of the total sold in each such year; what level of Chinese importation penetration he expects between now and 1996; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: The available information is given in the table. There are no estimates of future import penetration.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he will make a statement concerning the current EC anti-dumping investigation into the importation of Chinese bicycles into the Community;

(2) if he will introduce measures to protect domestic bicycle manufacturers against the dumping of imported bicycles from the far east; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: The European Commission, which is responsible for anti-dumping action, initiated an investigation into imports of bicycles from China and Taiwan on 12 October 1991 following a complaint lodged by the European Bicycle Manufacturers Association. The Government will be consulted by the Commission about its initial findings once the preliminary investigation has been completed.

Arms Exports

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what impact the Gulf war has had on his Department's monitoring of the export of weapons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: All export licence applications for the export of weapons to any destination have always been, and remain, subject to rigorous scrutiny.

Enterprise Measures

Dame Janet Fookes: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what his Department has done to encourage enterprise and innovation in British industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: Since the publication of the White Paper "DTI—the department for Enterprise" in January 1988, my Department has spent over £800 million in a range of initiatives to encourage enterprise and innovation in British industry and a very large number of firms have benefited. Applications to the Department's consultancy scheme under the enterprise initiative are now approaching 100,000 and the 40,000th project under the scheme was completed last week. Forty thousand managers have attended seminars and other live events under the "Managing into the 90s" awareness programme which was launched in 1989. The small firms merit award for research and technology—SMART—scheme has grown steadily since its introduction on a pilot basis in 1986. The last three annual competitions attracted 3,663 applications and more than 500 awards were made with a total Government commitment of £29 million. The support for products under research—SPUR—scheme introduced last year has been a great success with industry: over £9 million of Government support has already been committed and the 100th grant under the scheme was awarded this week. My Department has spent over £200 million in support of collaborative research programmes during the past three financial years. These achievements are part of my Department's continuing programme to stimulate innovation and to help companies to prepare for the challenges of the 1990s.

I announced last week that I am stepping up support for innovation by increasing expenditure over the next three years. Total provision for the DTI's innovation budget which is aimed at supporting industrial R and D will be some £346 million over three years. The budget is set to rise from £101 million in 1991-92 to £126 million in 1994-95. This represents a 27 per cent. increase in real terms over the 1990-91 outturn figure of £83 million and a 12 per cent. real terms increase over the estimated outturn of £101 million in 1991-92.

I am pleased to announce today extensions to the SMART scheme, subject to clearance with the European Commission, and the "Managing into the 90s" initiative, and a sister programme to the successful teaching company scheme which will encourage senior academics to work in industry. My Department will also fund an extension of the Shell technology enterprise programme. We shall continue our commitment to the enterprise initiative and to support for collaborative research including the Link initiative. The following paragraphs give more detail.

We shall be extending initiatives to help smaller firms. I am very pleased to announce a new three year programme of SMART competitions worth more than £40 million. This represents an increase of more than 40 per cent. over the corresponding budget during the last three years. SMART is open to individuals and organisations with fewer than 50 employees. Each year we shall be offering 180 stage I awards worth up to £45,000 each, for highly innovative projects with real commercial promise. Winners of the stage I awards are eligible to apply for stage II awards, each worth up to £60,000, towards further development work.

The "Managing into the 90s" awareness campaign, which seeks to spread best management practice, has had real impact amongst small and medium-sized enterprises. Building on this success, the programme will be extended and updated in a new phase which I am announcing today. Starting this summer, the new phase will focus on management practices which can help business rise to the challenges of competitive markets, innovate successfully and manage effectively the resulting need for change. New topics will be introduced relating to this theme. Part of the programme will specifically address the needs of the manufacturing sector. Representatives of training and enterprise councils have indicated that they welcome the new phase and that they look forward to co-operating with DTI over it.

The senior academics in industry programme which I am announcing today builds on the concept of the highly successful teaching company scheme. The programme, which will be run on a pilot basis for two years, will support the placement of senior academics in industry, for up to six months, to carry out a technology project which will benefit from their knowledge and research experience.

My Department will also fund an expansion of the Shell technology enterprise programme—STEP. This programme puts undergraduates into small firms in order to encourage students to consider careers in industry and help small firms realise the benefits of employing graduates. My Department will be making a contribution of £500,000 over three years, which will enable Shell almost to double the number of placements.

The Link initiative is proving a highly sucessful mechanism for encouraging collaborative research between industry and academia. Link is now firmly established as a process whereby large and small companies can co-operate with academia in high quality, industrially-relevant research. The Government are today publishing its response to the Segal Quince Wicksteed review of Link and I also warmly welcome the publication of the LINK steering group's first report. Today I am also announcing extensions of two particularly successful Link programmes for two further years with additional funding. The first of these is the Link nanotechnology programme, which is run jointly by DTI and the Science and Engineering Research Council. The programme will receive additional funding of £4 million from the Government. I am also announcing extension of the Link food processing programme which will receive additional Government funding of £3 million, including £2 million from the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food.

Inmos Ltd.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the value of money and shares (a) paid by the Government to set up Inmos Ltd., (b) received by the Government for the sale of Inmos to Thorn EMI and (c) the total paid to Inmos Ltd. and SGS Thomson in grants and loans from public funds.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 14 February 1992]: (a) The value of the Government shareholding in Inmos as at 31 December 1983 was £65·9 million, representing investment in ordinary and preference shares over a period of years; (b) the company was sold to Thorn EMI in 1984 at a profit of £29·6 million; (c) information on the amount of grant paid to individual companies is commercially confidential.

Garment Imports

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what controls exist to monitor and prevent dumping of cashmere garments imported into the EC/United Kingdom from Mongolia;

(2) what access Mongolia has to EC and United Kingdom domestic markets for importation of Mongolian cashmere garments.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 17 February 1992]: At present 10 member states maintain an embargo on a range of Mongolian garments, including pullovers, under the European Community's autonomous regime for state trading countries. Portugal has no such restrictions and therefore does not monitor the imports, Germany has a quota of 23,000 pieces for pullovers, monitored by import licensing, under which 1,260 fine animal hair products were imported in the first 10 months of 1991. As regards dumping, as with all other industrial products it is open to the Community industry concerned to present a case for anti-dumping action to the European Commission.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what claims for compensation are available to the United Kingdom manufacturers of fine animal hair pullovers where overshipment occurs;

(2) whether he will consider taking steps for the imposition of a complete embargo on Chinese cashmere garments (a) into the EC and (b) into the United Kingdom until agreed quota figures for previous years have been met;

(3) what representations he proposes to make to the EC authorities and the GATT authorities to investigate and remedy overshipment of Chinese cashmere garments into the EC/United Kingdom markets; what steps he is taking to prepare a case for compensation for overshipment of such garments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 17 February 1992]: Management of the EC/China multi-fibre arrangement textiles agreement is the responsibility of the European Commission and member states. In November last year we asked the Commission to investigate the apparent overshipment of the quota for Chinese fine animal hair pullovers in 1990 and 1991. There are no formal rules for dealing with compensation in cases of this sort, but we have specifically asked the Commission to address this aspect. In the past, overshipments have been compensated for by deducting an equivalent amount from the quota for the following year for that product. The measures appropriate in the present case will have to be decided once the outcome of the Commission's investigation is known. In the meantime, the Commission has already accepted our proposal for a new quota management system to tighten up controls.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the customs returns showing the numbers of cashmere garments imported into the EC, and into the United Kingdom, from China for each of the last five years for which figures are available, together with the relevant numbers permitted under the GATT bilateral quotas for the same years.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 17 February 1992]: Cashmere garments cannot be separately identified in customs import data. The quota in the EC/China MFA bilateral agreement which specifically applies to fine animal hair products is for pullovers and similar goods, whether made of cashmere, angora, mohair or other fine animal hairs.

The quota levels and the EC and United Kingdom import levels for these goods in the past five years are as follows:

Year	EC quota	EC imports[1]	United Kingdom share of quota	United Kingdom imports[1]
1987	55,680	87,540	12,400	20,740
1988	57,910	123,214	12,900	1,990
1989	90,000	50,312	20,000	2,000
1990	94,000	238,728	21,000	4,151
1991	97,000	399,184	22,000	8,615

NORTHERN IRELAND

Driving Licences

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table to show how many persons in Northern Ireland currently hold a driving licence, the type of licence and the percentage of the population aged 17 years and over which holds a licence to drive.

Mr. Needham: At 31 March 1991, the most recent date for which this information is currently available, the figures were as follows:

	Number
Provisional Licence	120,150
Full Driving Licence	785,975
Large Goods Vehicle Licence	26,472
Large Passenger Carrying Vehicle Licence	4,664
Taxi Licence	7,167

The 912,125 licence holders represent some 80 per cent. of the population aged 17 years and over.

Linfield Yarns

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what consultations have taken place with the management of Linfield Yarns concerning the temporary closure of its factory at Killyleagh, Co Down.

Mr. Needham: The international market for linen yarn has been in a depressed state for more than two years. During that time the Industrial Development Board has remained in close touch with all the firms in the sub-sector including the Linfield group who own Killyleagh Yarns. Most of Northern Ireland's flax spinners have found it necessary to operate some form of short-time working and in the case of Killyleagh Yarns the management decided to introduce a temporary stoppage during February 1992. This decision was fully discussed with IDB.

In the event there has not been a complete closure of the factory as originally intended. Approximately one third of the work force has been retained in order to meet unexpected orders.

Social Security Interviews

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make arrangements whereby all social security and benefit interviews will be conducted in private.

Mr. Hanley: Social security operational matters are the responsibility of Mr. Alec Wylie, chief executive of the Social Security Agency. He will write to the hon. Gentleman and copies of his reply will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Mobility Allowance

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what action will be taken to reduce the time involved in relation to mobility allowance tribunal hearings.

Mr. Hanley: The preparation of submissions to appeal hearings is the responsibility of the Social Security Agency. I am advised by the chief executive that the average time taken from receipt of an appeal letter to its submission to the Independent Tribunal Service is approximately 27 days.

Arrangements for the actual hearing of appeals are a matter for the president of the Independent Tribunal Service, Mr. MacLynn, and any request for information regarding such arrangements should be forwarded to him.

Disabled People (Rights)

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to introduce for Northern Ireland legislation which will provide equal rights for people with disabilities with rights to legal redress.

Dr. Mawhinney: None.

Mourne Hospital, Kilkeel

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps will be taken to ensure that acute hospital services are provided at Mourne hospital, Kilkeel, on an on-going basis; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The Mourne hospital, Kilkeel does not provide acute hospital services. Responsibility for the management of the hospital rests with the Southern health and social services board and I am not aware of any plans for developing acute services at the hospital.

Orthodontics

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been the outcome of the review into orthodontic provision within the health and social services boards in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Hanley: The following action has been taken on the recommendations made in the review of orthodontic provision in Northern Ireland:

—the vacant consultant orthodontic post in the Southern health and social services board is to be advertised next month;

—the upgrading of consultant facilities at Altnagelvin has commenced;

—Health and social services boards are encouraging general dental practitioners to use the community dental service when making reference to orthodontic specialists; and —a MOrth/MSc course is set to commence in October this year.

Ambulance Response Times

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps he is taking to reduce ambulance response times in the Newry and Mourne unit of management.

Mr. Hanley: Over the six months period to December 1991, between 55 and 60 per cent. of emergency calls in the Newry and Mourne area were responded to within eight minutes and almost 93 per cent. within 19 minutes. The nationally agreed ambulance service standards for these response times are 50 and 95 per cent. respectively. The situation in the Newry and Mourne unit is being closely monitored and every effort is being made by management to keep response times to a minimum.

Downpatrick Hospital

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has taken place in relation to the building of the third phase of the new hospital for Downpatrick on the Downshire hospital site.

Mr. Hanley: The Eastern health and social services board has not made any proposals to the Department of Health and Social Services concerning the construction of a third phase of the new hospital.

Downe Hospital, Downpatrick

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps will be taken to reduce the waiting lists for the out-patient clinics for dermatology, ophthalmology and ear, nose and throat at the Downe hospital, Downpatrick, Co. Down.

Mr. Hanley: Information about the numbers of people awaiting out-patient appointments is not collected centrally. However, I can assure you that I expect health and social services boards to take action to ensure that waiting times for out-patient clinics are kept to a minimum. The management of out-patient clinics at the Downe hospital, Downpatrick is primarily the responsibility of the Eastern board, and the hon. Gentleman may wish to contact Mr. Norman Ferguson, the chairman of the board.

Nurse Clinical Grading Appeals

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many stage three appeals in respect of the nurse clinical grading appeal scheme have yet to be heard in the Southern health and social services board.

Mr. Hanley: A total of 283 at 10 February 1992.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what additional resources will be allocated to the nurse clinical grading appeal scheme in order to expedite outstanding cases within the Southern health and social services board.

Mr. Hanley: A total of £3[illegible] million was allocated to the boards in April 1988 to cover the full cost of implementation of the scheme including appeals. There are no plans to provide additional resources.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many appeals in respect of the nurse clinical grading appeal scheme have yet to be heard in the Down section of the Down and Lisburn unit of management.

Mr. Hanley: A total of 92 at 10 February 1992.

Local Enterprise Development, South Down

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to establish a Local Enterprise Development Unit office in the constituency of South Down.

Mr. Needham: There are no plans to establish a LEDU office in the constituency of South Down. The area is covered by LEDU's southern regional office in Newry.

Labour Statistics

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many young people under 25 years of age are currently unemployed; and if he will list the numbers by district council area.

Mr. Needham: At January 1992, the latest date for which information is available, there were 28,686 unemployed claimants under 25 years of age in Northern Ireland. Information on the numbers of unemployed young persons by district council area is available from the NOMIS database which can be accessed on-line by House of Commons Library staff.

Colleges of Further Education

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been the funding allocations to colleges of further education in each of the education and library boards since 1 April 1982 to 31 March 1992.

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will place in the Library a copy of the representations made to his predecessor on 7 June 1989 by the Golfing Union of Ireland (Ulster branch) on the subject of the Registration of Clubs (Northern Ireland) Order 1987 and the regulations made thereunder; and what response has been given to those representations.

Mr. Hanley: A copy of the representations, with the response, has been placed in the Library.

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he has yet considered the review, dated 4 April 1990, of the operation of the Registration of Clubs (Northern Ireland) Order 1987 by the licensing legislation and voluntary sports clubs joint working group; if he will place a copy of the review in the Library; and if he intends to take into account the recommendations made in that review.

Mr. Hanley: I have considered the review and a copy has been placed in the Library. I shall take its recommendations into account in considering the relevant legislation.

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he expects to complete his review of the Registration of Clubs (Northern Ireland) Order 1987 and the regulations made thereunder; and when he expects to introduce proposals for further legislation on this subject.

Mr. Hanley: The order and regulations are kept under continuous review. The Government have no plans at present to introduce proposals for further legislation in this field.

Set-aside Schemes

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many set-aside schemes have been implemented in the constituency of South Down since 1 April 1988 to 31 March 1991 and from 1 April 1991 to 31 December 1991.

Mr. Hanley: Statistics are not available on a constituency basis, however, the numbers of farmers entering into set-aside agreements in the whole of County Down is as follows:

5 year scheme	13	8
1 year scheme[1]	n/a	5

Note:
[1] The 1 year set-aside scheme was introduced in September 1991 and will run to August 1992.

Industrial Sites

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made in obtaining land for industrial sites on the Ballydugan road, Downpatrick; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: IDB is negotiating for the purchase of a six acre site at Down Race club, to be used for industrial purposes. While I hope that the negotiations will be successful, the outcome will not be known for some months.

Blood Products

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many donations of blood were taken by the National Blood Transfusion Service in Northern Ireland in each year from 1978 to the latest year available.

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 17 February 1992]: The information requested is not immediately available. I will write to the hon. Member as soon as possible and place a copy of that letter in the Library.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many transfers of (a) blood and (b) blood products were performed by the national health service in Northern Ireland in each year from 1978 to the latest year available.

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 17 February 1992]: This information is not held centrally.

WALES

Housing Associations

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to increase the level of grant rate for housing associations in Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The level of housing association grant is linked to building society mortgage rates. It falls to Housing for Wales to adjust the grant rate accordingly.

Compensation Claim

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received concerning the claim for compensation on behalf of Mr. and Mrs. Heselton, Runston farm, Shirenewton, Chepstow, Gwent; when he expects a resolution to the matter; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: My Department wrote to Mr. and Mrs. Heselton's solicitors on 3 January 1991 in response to a claim for costs arising out of a planning application. No representations have been received since then, but I understand that the solicitors have approached the Ministry of Defence on this matter.

Usk Barrage

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received regarding the impact on fish on the River Usk and its tributaries of the proposed Usk barrage; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I have received a number of representations about the impact of the proposed Usk barrage on fish stocks.

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received concerning the proposed Usk barrage; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I have received 53 representations concerning the proposed Usk barrage. Most of them refer to the environmental impact of the barrage.

Sewage Treatment

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received from Usk town council, Usk civic society and Usk action group regarding the application for a sewage treatment plant at the island picnic site near the River Usk; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: I understand that representations were made by Usk town council and Usk Civic Society in the context of a planning appeal for a sewage treatment plant. The appeal fell to be determined by a planning inspector appointed by my right hon. Friend and, following a local inquiry, his decision to allow the appeal was issued on 30 January. It would not be appropriate for me to comment on the merits of the development.

Elderly People

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish the latest figures for the percentage of (a) elderly men and (b) elderly women living in homes for old and disabled elderly people in Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: On 31 March 1990, 22·1 per cent. of residents in homes for the elderly were men aged 65 or over and 76·0 per cent. women over that age. The remainder were under 65. Residents aged 65 or over represent 15·7 per 1,000 population in that age group in the case of men, and 36·1 per 1,000 in that of women.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish the latest available figures showing the incidence of dementia amongst the elderly population in Wales; and if he will give an overall breakdown according to type of dementia.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Studies suggest that approximately 10 per cent. of people in Wales aged 65 and over, and 25 per cent. of those over 80, show evidence of intellectual failure.

County teams working to implement the all-Wales mental illness stategy are expected to assess local need and, over time, that should help to build up a clearer picture of the incidence of dementia.

Disability

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish figures showing the severity and age distribution of disability by its various medical causes in Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Information on the distribution of disability by medical cause is not held centrally.

Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowance

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to announce decisions on HLCA payments for each forthcoming year no later than the end of December in the previous year.

Mr. David Hunt: I fully recognise the importance of the hill livestock compensatory allowance scheme to our livestock producers in less favoured areas, and always seek to ensure that decisions on the HLCA scheme arrangements are announced as quickly as possible.

Coracle Fishermen

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will introduce legislation to safeguard the future interests of the coracle fishermen in west Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I am aware of the concern about the future of the coracle fishermen in west Wales and the cost of their fishing licences, and am considering the representations that have been made to me.

Ewes

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many flocks of more than 1,000 breeding ewes there are in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: There were 898 main holdings with flocks of more than 1,000 breeding sheep in Wales in June 1991.

Dyfed Health Authority

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was (a) the capital and (b) the revenue allocation of East Dyfed health authority for the financial year 1991-92; and what were the corresponding figures for each of the other health authorities in Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The information requested, relating to the latest notified discretionary capital and revenue allocations for 1991-92 for the East Dyfed health authority and for other district health authorities in Wales, is as follows:

	Discretionary Capital Allocation 1991-92 £ million	Discretionary Revenue Allocation 1991-92 £ million
Clwyd	18·3	147·8
East Dyfed	3·6	91·4
Gwent	7·5	159·1
Gwynedd	5·3	89·5
Mid Glamorgan	10·6	205·9
Pembrokeshire	3·9	40·7
Powys	2·7	53·1
South Glamorgan	11·4	180·9
West Glamorgan	12·3	134·2

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the proposed (a) capital and (b) revenue allocation of East Dyfed health authority for the financial year 1992-93; and what are the corresponding figures for each of the other health authorities in Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply that my right hon. Friend gave to the hon. Member for Cardiff, North (Mr. Jones) on 4 February, when he announced the allocation of resources for hospital, community health and related services in Wales for 1992-93.

EC Committee of the Regions

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a consultation document on the most appropriate means for Wales to be represented among the 24 representatives from the United Kingdom on the European Community Committee of the Regions.

Mr. David Hunt: I have no plans to do so. The Government will be considering in the course of 1992 how the 24 United Kingdom seats should be allocated and the candidates chosen.

Charge Capping

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his statement of 12 February, Official Report, column 1053, if he will give figures for the numbers of civil servants who have been allocated to the special unit he has set up to make the necessary arrangement for charge capping; how many of them are full time with no other duties; what is its total estimated establishment cost; and if he will make a statement on the main principles by which it will perform its duties.

Mr. David Hunt: The principles governing the charge capping of local authorities in Wales are set out in part VII of the Local Government Finance Act 1988, as amended by the Local Government Finance and Valuation Act 1991.

The number of staff required for the special unit will depend on the number of authorities setting budgets above my expenditure plans as approved by Parliament on 12 February. The bulk of the work of the unit will involve individual scrutiny of such budgets, to enable me to decide whether they place an unacceptable burden on charge payers.

Counties are required to set their budgets before 1 March, and districts before 11 March.

Schools Inspectors

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which grant-maintained schools have been visited by Her Majesty's inspectors; in each case (a) by how many inspectors, (b) for how long and (c) at what cost; and whether it is proposed to publish any report arising from these visits.

Sir Wyn Roberts [holding answer 3 February 1992]: Her Majesty's inspectors have made two visits to Cwmcarn comprehensive grant-maintained school. On both occasions, one inspector visited the school and stayed for the day. The cost of the visits was around £500. In addition, when I visited the school last December, I was accompanied by a member of the inspectorate.

Visits of that nature do not result in published reports but contribute to more general reports, such as the HMI annual review of educational provision in Wales.

SCOTLAND

Boundary Commission

Sir Hector Monro: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether the Boundary Commission for Scotland has yet decided when to start a general review of constituencies in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: The Parliamentary Constituencies Act 1986 requires the Boundary Commission for Scotland to submit its next general report between February 1993 and February 1998 and within these limits the commission has discretion when to start a general review. The commission, in the exercise of its discretion, gave notice on 16 February 1992 of its intention to commence forthwith a general review of constituencies in Scotland.

Constituencies

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the six largest and six smallest electorates in parliamentary constituencies and the average electorate for each constituency.

The average parliamentary constituency electorates in 1991 were 66,908 in the United Kingdom and 66,915 in Great Britain, counting Milton Keynes as two constituencies in both cases. Corresponding information relating to the 1992 registers is not yet available.

Forestry Commission

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he is considering to dispose of the assets of the Forestry Commission or any part of them to the public sector; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 13 January 1992]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Edinburgh, Pentlands (Mr. Rifkind) gave to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Dumfries (Sir H. Monro) on 16 June 1989, Official Report, columns 542-43. This remains the Government's policy.

DEFENCE

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many civilian personnel are employed by the Ministry of Defence in Scotland.

Mr. Alan Clark: There were 12,125 as at 1 January 1992.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he plans any new construction to aid rapid dismantling of British nuclear weapons withdrawn from service.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the implications of the announced reduction in numbers of WE177 free-fall nuclear weapons held by the RAF for his Department's plans for the development of a tactical air-to-surface missile.

Mr. Alan Clark: There are none.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what differences exist between WE177s in (a) Royal Navy and (b) RAF service.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is not our practice to discuss details of nuclear weapon design.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the composition of the special nuclear experts team sent to Russia on 10 February to evaluate the problems in dismantling and transporting the nuclear weapons being removed from deployment; what criteria were used in choosing these experts; and whether any specialist non-governmental organisations have been consulted as to the most appropriate technical approaches required.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The team was led by the Ministry of Defence's principal technical adviser on nuclear matters, and included experts on nuclear weapons and materials from Government and from industry. The composition of the team was decided in the light of advance contacts with the Russian authorities and information received from allies who had previously visited Russia.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any plans to meet experts from Scientists for Global Responsibility to discuss its reports on the methods and risks of dismantling nuclear warheads.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No.

Harrier

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has any plans to give the Harrier GR5 or GR7 a nuclear role.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No.

Submarines, Irish Sea

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when his Department next expects to meet representatives of the fishing industry in order to discuss submarine activity in the Irish sea.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Ministry of Defence officials will discuss this and other matters with representatives of the fishing industry in the sub-group of the Fishing Industry Safety Group set up to consider submarine operations and fishing vessel safety. The sub-group is chaired by the Department of Transport and officials there will shortly be making arrangements for a further meeting.

Departmental Orders

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list, by value, the orders placed by his Department with Scottish-based defence industry individual companies in the last 10 years.

Mr. Alan Clark: The information requested is not held centrally and could be obtained only with disproportionate cost and effort.

Arms Sales

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of British arms exports are sold to (a) third world countries and (b) to the middle east countries; how those proportions have varied in the past few years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the Statement on the Defence Estimates 1991, volume 2, table 2.7.

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what impact the Gulf war has had on his Department's monitoring of the export of weapons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: All export licence applications for the export of weapons to any destination have always been subject to the most rigorous scrutiny.

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information his Department has on the proportion of world trade in arms sold to (i) third world countries and (ii) middle east countries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: The proportion of world trade in arms sold to third world countries is 35 per cent. and to middle east countries 42 per cent. These figures represent an average based on 1986 to 1990 data.

Trunk Road Construction

Mr. Prescott: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which trunk road building schemes are planned to receive Government expenditure in the years (a) 1993-94, (b) 1994-95 and (c) 1995-96; and how much each scheme will cost in total.

Mr. Rifkind: Trunk road building schemes which will incur works expenditure by Government in the three years from 1993-94 to 1995-96 comprise schemes already under construction at the start of 1993-94, and new starts during each of the three years.

I shall be announcing shortly new starts for 1992-93. The composition of new starts in subsequent years will depend on progress with statutory procedures and the availability of funds in those years.

Total provision for new construction is currently £1,395 million in 1992-93, £1,477 million in 1993-94 and £1,511 million in 1994-95.

Ship Brokers

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much his Department paid in fees or salary for each of the last three years in respect of (a) the Government freight market representative on the Baltic exchange, (b) the Government freight agent and (c) other specialist ship brokers.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Government freight market representative received no payments from the Department. Payments were made to the Government freight agent (GFA) in respect of freight forwarding and shipping services for the movement of Government cargoes by land, sea and air. These totalled £1,919,145 and £1,514,812 during the years 1988-89 and 1989-90 respectively. Since 1 January 1990, the Ministry of Defence has been responsible for the appointment of the GFA. This Department has made no payments to other specialised ship brokers.

Port Buy-out Bids

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consideration he has given to bids for management buy-outs in respect of the trust ports of Medway and Tilbury.

Mr. McLoughlin: It will be for Medway ports authority and the Port of London authority, once they have received the final bids for their ports, including those expected from management and employee buy-out teams, to assess them against the objectives of sale agreed for each port and to make their recommendations to my right hon. and learned Friend, who will then consider them.

Lorry and Bus Drivers

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what further steps he is taking to improve the training offered to learner lorry and bus drivers.

Mr. Chope: I am pleased to say that the Driving Standards Agency, an executive agency of the Department of Transport, today issued a consultation paper to over 100 organisations concerned with driver training and road safety on a draft syllabus for trainee lorry and bus drivers.

The syllabus will be published later this year, along with guidance on the lorry and bus driving test, and will provide the basis for a structured programme of training. By reference to the syllabus such drivers will be able to confirm the standard of driving they are receiving and check for themselves their training programme and progress.

British Rail, Scotland

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will state the proposed capital expenditure plans for British Rail in Scotland for each of the next five years.

Mr. Freeman: BR keeps only limited historic information on investment on a geographic basis. There is no information on rolling stock investment, and as BR plans on a business sector basis there is no information for future years.

Aviation Services

Mr. Michael Spicer: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made by EC member states towards providing for a single market in aviation services by the end of 1992, with respect in particular to the abolition of bilateral air servicing agreements and to the permitting of cross border investment by one airline in another.

Mr. McLoughlin: Good progress is being made. The third and final stage of EC air transport liberalisation measures is under negotiation in Brussels and is due to take effect by 1 Janaury 1993. Air services between and within EC member states will then be covered by EC rules rather than bilateral provisions. Cross-border investment between airlines is already covered by provisions relating to competition, including the EC mergers regulation which took effect in 1990.

British Airways

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consultations he has had with British Airways following publication of "A Manifesto for Civil Aviation in the 1990s."

Mr. McLoughlin: There are continuing contacts between the Department and British Airways about matters of mutual interest. While there have been no discussions specifically about BA's manifesto, I am pleased to note that there is no difference between the Government and BA in wishing to break down barriers to competition.

Oil Standby Vessels

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the number of oil standby vessels in the United Kingdom continental shelf, and what is the name of each vessel, its owner, the date on which it was first registered, and the date of the most recent inspection.

Mr. McLoughlin: The number of vessels certificated for use in the United Kingdom standby industry is at present 176.

Forth Ports Authority

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will detail his reasons for consenting to the public flotation of the Forth ports authority.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Forth ports authority submitted proposals to my right hon. and learned Friend for the privatisation of its undertaking by means of a flotation. My right hon. and learned Friend was satisfied that they were in accordance with the provisions of the Ports Act 1991. On this basis he was able to give the authority his consent in principle.

Shipping Report

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he has taken to implement the recommendations in the joint Government/industry working party report on "British Shipping: Challenges and Opportunities".

Mr. McLoughlin: The joint working party made five basic recommendations, covering simplification of the procedures and regulations surrounding registration; review of the nationality rules applying to officers on British ships; creation of a more flexible framework for registration law; continued pressure to secure liberalisation of cabotage, and a more competitive financial framework, in Europe; and emphasis on raising the profile, and revising the structure, of marine training.

Under the first of these, a number of changes have already been achieved, including the introduction of simplified procedures and regulations regarding the type approval of ships' equipment, and the establishment of arrangements under which surveyors in the British dependent territories can survey vessels on behalf of the United Kingdom where this is more convenient for the owners or operators of the vessels concerned.

We are also nearing completion of a review of the nationality requirements imposed on senior British Merchant Navy officers; and have continued to press for a more liberal competitive environment in Europe.

Changes to registration law need primary legislation, for which we are seeking an early opportunity. In the meantime, considerable preparatory work has already been undertaken.

The final recommendation, focussed on training, is primarily a matter for the shipping industry itself, although the Government are closely involved in a current review of the structure of seafarers' training and certification. The Chamber of Shipping last year produced a report setting out its wider thoughts on future training needs. It has also assured us that the industry continues to attach great importance to the subject.

Wick Airport

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consideration he has given to the implications for safety and the continuing viability of Wick airport in Caithness of the proposal to withdraw Meteorological Office observers from the airport; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: Operating arrangements at Wick airport are a matter for Highlands and Islands Airports Ltd., which I understand is considering whether to replace their Meteorological Office observer with an air traffic controller trained in meteorological observation, as has been done previously at some other United Kingdom airports. Whatever the outcome of these considerations, Wick airport will continue to meet the safety standards set by the Civil Aviation Authority. The viability of the airport is not in question.

Pilot Training

Sir Robin Maxwell-Hyslop: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which pilot training organisations in the United Kingdom train pilots for flying in connection with agricultural operations; and whether his Department recognises such qualifications from any United Kingdom training facilities.

Mr. McLoughlin: I understand from the Civil Aviation Authority that in the United Kingdom pilots are not trained specifically in agricultural operations by pilot training organisations. Such training, which is tailored to the needs of the individual pilot, is carried out by the firms who provide aerial agricultural services, under the supervision of the CAA.

Before a pilot can carry out what are known as "aerial work" flights, such as crop spraying, he must hold a commercial pilot's licence granted by the CAA, and to use pesticides he must also hold a certificate of competence issued, in England and Wales, by the National Proficiency Test Council under the Control of Pesticides Regulations 1986.

Car Licences

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the income from provisional car licences in 1990-91; and what is the estimated income for 1991-92.

Mr. Chope: The income from provisional car licences in 1990-91 was £17·18 million.

The estimated income for the same source for 1991-92 is £17·8 million.

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his estimate of the income from short-period licences and the renewal of licences by drivers of 70-plus years in 1991-92.

Mr. Chope: Short-period licences are issued only for medical reasons and there is no charge for their renewal either before or after aged 70. The estimated income in 1991-92 from three-yearly renewals by drivers over age 70 is £820,000.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Legal Aid

Mr. Michael Spicer: To ask the Attorney-General what information he has on the level of fees for legal aid work by solicitors, and the methods of their computation, in other EC countries.

The Attorney-General: Information on all legal aid payments to solicitors is held by the legal aid board or, in the case of Crown court work, by the Lord Chancellor's Department. Information on amounts paid can be provided by various case types. For example, the total of solicitors' costs for magistrates' court work in 1989-90 was £131 million, £300 per case, and in 1990-91 it was £152 million, £346 per case. If the hon. Member is interested in the level of a particular category of fee, the Lord Chancellor will arrange for him to be provided with the relevant information, if it is available. No detailed information is held on the computation of lawyers' fees for publicly funded work in other EC countries. I understand that expenditure on legal aid in France for last year was around 10 per cent. of expenditure in England and Wales; and that in Belgium is less than 1 per cent. Such comparisons are, however, difficult because the legal systems in these countries are different from our own.

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Attorney-General how much has been spent on legal aid in each of the last five years; what was the average for civil and criminal legal aid bills in each year; and how many cases in each year were legally aided.

The Attorney-General: In each of the last five financial years, the amount spent on legal aid in England and Wales was:

£ million

	Gross	Net
1986-87	458	363
1987-88	537	434
1988-89	610	478
1989-90	715	569
1990-91	852	684

Information on average legal aid bills, covering the last five years, is set out in the table.

	1986-87 £	1987-88 £	1988-89 £	1989-90 £	1990-91 £

Acts of assistance	1,909	2,173	2,139	2,298	2,384

Political Asylum

Mr. Madden: To ask the Attorney-General what action he is taking to allocate more resources to enable delays in appeals against refusal to grant political asylum to be reduced; what is the average delay in such appeals being heard at the latest available date; and what was the average delay in such appeals at the comparable period in each of the last three years.

The Attorney-General: The Lord Chancellor's Department plans to increase by 10 per cent. the staffing resources available to the immigration appellate authorities (IAA) and to provide additional resources to improve existing accommodation and increase accommodation for the future. These measures will help the IAA to process more effectively all categories of immigration appeals including political asylum claims.

The IAA keep statistics for immigration cases generally, but do not record separate statistics for asylum cases. However, because of their importance, the IAA aim to give priority to asylum cases whenever possible. It is expected that the multi-terminal case-tracking system recently installed at Thanet house will enable the IAA to produce more detailed information.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prison Officers Association (Break-ins)

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what progress has been made in the police inquiries into four break-ins into the headquarters of the Prison Officers Association;

(2) whether he will set up an inquiry into the recent burglaries of the headquarters of the Prison Officers Association.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No. I will not set up an inquiry. The investigation of criminal offences is an operational matter for chief officers of police and it would not be appropriate for me to comment on this investigation while it was continuing.

Car Boot Sales

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has on the use of car boot sales as a means of disposing of stolen goods; and if he will bring forward proposals to deal with this.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: There is no evidence that the majority of traders at car boot sales are anything other than law-abiding citizens. Adequate provision already exists in law to deal with those who use the sales as a means of disposing of stolen goods. It is an offence under section 22 of the Theft Act 1968 for a person to handle stolen goods if he knows or believes them to be so. This offence carries a maximum penalty of 14 years' imprisonment and an unlimited fine. I therefore have no intention of bringing forward proposals to deal specifically with this type of crime.

Community Service

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of offenders re-offended (a) while doing community service or (b) after community service in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. John Patten: The available information is published in Home Office statistical bulletins issue 18/83 "Reconvictions of those given Community Service Orders" (HSOB 34/86 "Reconvictions of those given Probation Orders" also refers to it) Copies of these publications are in the Library.

Of the 2,486 persons given CSOs 1278 (51 per cent.) were reconvicted within two years of the start of the order. Of these, 18 per cent. of the total were reconvicted during their CSO, 15 per cent. coincidental with the termination of their order and 18 per cent. after termination.

The reconviction rate rises to 59 per cent. after three years.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) community service sentences, (b) fines and (c) custodial sentences have been imposed by magistrates in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. John Patten: Information for 1990, which is provisional, is given in the table.

Drug Seizures, Durham

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many drug seizures and prosecutions have taken place in the Durham constabulary area in the last year for which figures are available; and if he will list the type of drugs involved.

Mr. John Patten: Information on seizures of drug type made by the Durham constabulary is given in table A1.3 of the Home Office statistical bulletin "Statistics of the misuse of drugs: seizures and offenders dealt with, United Kingdom, 1990" (area table), a copy of which is in the Library.

The information regarding prosecutions and drugs involved is given in the table.

LSD	9
Heroin	4
Amphetamine	4
Cocaine	1

Rows do not add to total because a person can be dealt with for offences involving more than one drug type.

Foundation for Business Responsibilities

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a further statement about the enquiries by the Charity Commissioners into the activities of the Foundation for Business Responsibilities.

Mr. John Patten: Following allegations made in an article in The Observer on 17 November 1991, the trustees of the Foundation for Business Responsibilities have supplied the Charity Commissioners with information about the activities of the charity and its expenditure and receipts. The commissioners have met the chairman of the trustees and have also been in touch with the charity's auditors and inspected the charity's records.

The Charity Commissioners' inquiries have not yet been concluded.

Immigration

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many immigrants have entered the United Kingdom each year since 1979; and if he will state in each year the countries from which most originated.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information on persons accepted for settlement in the United Kingdom in the years 1979-90, by nationality, is given in tables 22 and 14, respectively, of the 1987 and 1990 volumes of the annual Home Office Command Paper "Control of Immigration: Statistics United Kingdom" (Cm 415 and Cm 1571). These figures are of persons subject to immigration control who are granted indefinite leave to remain here.

Information on a different basis is produced by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys from the international passenger survey. This defines a migrant to the United Kingdom as a person who has been resident abroad for more than a year, and who on entry states the intention of residing here for a year or more. This information includes British citizens. The appropriate estimates for 1979-90 are given in the 1988 and 1990 issues of the OPCS publication "International Migration" (series MN, Nos. 15 and 17 respectively) in tables 2.1 and 2.5. These figures exclude migration between the United Kingdom and the Republic of Ireland.

Copies of the above publications are in the Library. Information for 1991 is not yet available.

Prisoners

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what research he has done on the effects of mixing unconvicted and convicted prisoners; and what information he has on the practice of other countries on this matter;

(2) what representations he has had objecting to the proposed mixing of unconvicted and convicted prisoners in Preston and other prisons; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: My hon. Friend the Member for South Ribble (Mr. Atkins) has drawn to my attention the views expressed by the secretary of the Preston branch of the Prison Officers Association. These views have also been expressed by the branch at their meetings with management to discuss plans to increase the use of accommodation in the prison.

The prison rules 1964 provide that unconvicted prisoners should be kept out of contact with convicted prisoners as far as this can reasonably be done, and provided that the policy should not require a prisoner to be deprived unduly of the society of other prisoners. Most local prisons in England and Wales sensibly operate a degree of mixing to enable them to accommodate the inmates remanded or committed to custody by the courts in their catchment areas. This makes obvious sense, particularly where it avoids the need to hold prisoners in police cells, which are entirely unsuitable for the purpose. In some local prisons the regime for those on remand is improved by mixing with those who are convicted.

As regards practice in other countries, I understand that in a large number the separation of the convicted from the unconvicted is not regarded as obligatory.

Bail Offenders

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the results of his survey of research on reoffending while on bail; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Newark (Mr. Alexander) on 6 February 1992.

Poll Tax

Mr. Enright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have had legal proceedings arising from poll tax legislation commenced against them.

Mr. John Patten: This information is not available from magistrates courts records in the form sought. About 11 million summonses have been issued alleging non-payment of community charge during the period 1 April 1990 to 31 December 1991, but some will have involved the same persons in respect of separate financial years.

Skateboarding Byelaws

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the local authorities who have now adopted the model byelaw relating to the use of skateboards on pavements, roads and footpaths; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Since 1978, the Home Office has offered local authorities a model byelaw which prohibits the use of skateboards and roller skates on footways and carriageways to the danger of other persons lawfully using the footway or carriageway. In 1990, the model byelaw was modified to make it an offence for a person using a skateboard or roller skates to cause not only danger but also nuisance or reasonable grounds for annoyance to other persons using the footway or carriageway.

Our records indicate that 66 local authorities have adopted the 1978 model byelaws, and that to date one local authority has adopted the 1990 model wording. The local authorities are:

Metropolitan Police (Community Events)

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) whether it is the usual practice for the Metropolitan police to charge for attendance at community and charity events;

(2) what has been the total cost of the policing of the Notting Hill carnival in each of the last three years; and what contribution towards that cost was made by the carnival organisers in each of those years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that it is not the usual practice to charge for police attendance at community and charity events.

The estimated additional costs of policing the Notting Hill carnival were:

Year	Additional costs £
1989	1,111,000
1990	1,606,000
1991	1,554,000

The carnival organisers have made no contribution towards the cost of policing this event.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Catalytic Converters

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which EC countries currently offer fiscal incentives for the purchase of three-way catalytic converters; what taxes are levied in the United Kingdom on sales of catalytic converters and at what rate; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: In the United Kingdom, VAT is levied on sales of catalytic converters at the standard rate of 17·5 per cent. I have no information on any fiscal incentives for the purchase of three-way catalytic converters in other EC countries.

Government Expenditure

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the expenditure in each year since 1979, in real and constant prices, of Government expenditure in (a) agriculture, forestry and fishing, (b) industrial development, (c) energy, (d) infrastructure, (e) environmental protection, (f) health, (g) social development and services, (h) earth and atmosphere, (i) advancement of knowledge, (j) civil space, (k) defence and (l) not elsewhere classified.

Mr. Mellor: The available information on general government expenditure by main function since 1978-79 is given, in cash and real terms, in tables 2·2 and 2·3 of the statistical supplement to the 1991 Autumn Statement (Cm. 1920). Corresponding information for the other areas of expenditure requested is not available or could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Unemployment and Redundancy Pay

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will update the information on unemployment benefit and redundancy payments given in his answer of 27 July 1983, Official Report, columns 449-50.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested is as follows:

	(a) Total benefits paid to unemployed people[1] (£ million cash)	(b) Total expenditure from the Redundancy Fund (£ million cash)	(c) (a) plus (b) as a proportion of Gross Domestic Product (Percentage)

Pension Funds

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will bring up to date the information on the growth of pension and other funds given in his answer of 7 March 1984, Official Report, column 581.

Mr. Maples: The latest annual estimates for the period 1982 to 1990, the latest year for which a figure is available, are given below. Updated figures for earlier periods are available on the CSO database, series AALV, which can be accessed through the House of Commons Library.

Mortgage Subsidies

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to prohibit the payment of mortgage subsidies by banks and other lenders to their employees; and what is his estimate of the gross value of such subsidies.

Mr. Maude: No. I have no firm data on the gross value of these particular subsidies, although the total net taxable value of beneficial loans made by all employers is estimated to be about £180 million in 1991-92.

Food (VAT)

Dr. Marek: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether the zero-rating for VAT of those items of food which are currently zero-rated is safeguarded until at least December 1996.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Yes.

Wines (Excise Duty)

Dr. Marek: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his policy with regard to the minimum level of excise duty on (a) still table wine and (b) sparkling wine, that should be applied within the European Community.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The United Kingdom has consistently argued that it does not consider centrally determined duty rates as necessary for the completion of the single market, and that member states should be free to set their own rates of duty. The Government are prepared to accept a minimum zero rate for both still and sparkling wines, provided that wine is treated as an excisable product and remains within the control system for intra-EC movements of goods subject to excise duties.

Tax Rates

Mr. Battle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing the value of the main tax reliefs and allowances and the saving that would occur if these were restricted to the basic rate of tax.

Mr. Maude: A table showing the cost of direct tax allowances and reliefs in 1991-92 was given in appendix D of the Autumn Statement statistical supplement Cm 1920 published in January 1992.

It is estimated that the yield from restricting all of the main income tax allowances and reliefs to the basic rate would be some £2 billion at 1991-92 levels of income.

Inward Investment

Mr. Battle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the inward investment by the United Kingdom from (a) Japan, (b) the United States of America and (c) Korea, for each year from 1978 to 1991, (i) in real terms at 1991 prices, (ii) as a proportion of total capital investment in the United Kingdom and (iii) as a proportion of total capital investment in the EC.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 13 February 1992]: The information available on net inward investment in the United Kingdom by Japanese and United States companies is expressed at 1990 prices by adjusting the actual investment by the changes in the latest available implied gross domestic product deflator; and as a percentage of total investment by all other countries in the United Kingdom.

Information for investment in 1990 will be available in the next month or so. Information for investment by Korea is not available.

Notes:

1. Net investment comprises investment less disinvestment and includes unremitted profits as net investment.
2. A minus sign indicates net disinvestment. In 1984 there was overall a net disinvestment by overseas companies in the UK.
3. Data prior to 1984 exclude oil companies.

Fully comparable information on direct inward investment in the European Community (EC) from outside the EC is not available. However, Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development estimates of United States and Japanese direct investment in the UK as a percentage of direct investment in all EC countries show:

Merchant Shipping

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list policies of a financial nature which have been pursued by Her Majesty's Government since 1979 which have been of assistance to the United Kingdom merchant fleet.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 17 February 1992]: The list sets out the financial measures which have been of particular assistance to the shipping industry since 1979.

1. Writing-down allowances

In 1985 the capital allowance rules were changed to allow capital expenditure to be written down for tax purposes from the date on which it was incurred rather than from the time the asset was brought into use. These new arrangements are of particular importance for ships where stage payments are normally made as construction proceeds. Also in 1985, the special rules which provide that writing down allowances for ships can be used more flexibly than those for other forms of capital expenditure were extended to second-hand ships—previously they applied only to new ships.

2. Business expansion scheme

In 1986 the business expansion scheme was extended to include ship chartering as a qualifying activity. Ship operating and chartering companies have an annual finance limit of £5 million (as do private rented housing companies) instead of the £750,000 limit for other trading companies.

3. Foreign earnings deduction for seafarers

In 1988 the length of time which seafarers may spend in tehe United Kingdom without losing foreign earnings deductions was extended from 62 days, which is still the concession allowed to other workers with a significant overseas component to their jobs, to 90 days. In 1991 the concession for seafarers was extended to 183 days.

4. Training and crew relief costs

The 1988 Merchant Shipping Bill introduced two schemes to help the industry:

(a) Government assistance for training (GAFT), under which the Government provides funds equivalent to half the cost of training officer cadets. The budget for GAFT is about £3·5 million per annum.

(b) The crew relief costs scheme, under which the Government assists with the costs of transporting United Kingdom-based crews to and from United Kingdom-flagged vessels in distant waters. The budget for this scheme is about £5 million per annum.

Children's Car Seats

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the total revenue from value added tax on children's car seats in motor cars in each of the last three years.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 18 February 1992]: I regret that information on which to base an estimate is not available.

ENERGY

Mine Gas Escapes

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what inquiries his Department has made into the leakage of methane gas from closed coal mines; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: None. I am, however, aware that the Department of the Environment is commissioning research into methane from abandoned coal mines. My Department is sponsoring a review by the Watt committee of measurement methods and available data relating to methane emissions from various sources.

Energy Single Market

Mr. Michael Spicer: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what progress has been made by EC member states towards providing for a single market in energy services with respect in particular to the free cross-border transmission of energy, the permitting of cross-border investment by one energy company in another, and third party access to a European-wide transmission network.

Mr. Wakeham: The European Commission adopted proposals on 22 January which represent the second phase of the internal energy market. The United Kingdom fully supports the Commission's proposals which, if adopted by the Council, will represent a significant liberalisation of the European Community's electricity and gas sectors. Copies of the proposals will be placed in the Libraries of both Houses shortly.

EMPLOYMENT

Travel-to-work Areas

Mr. John Townend: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if he will list the travel-to-work areas which do not have assisted area status where the unemployment is higher than in the Bridlington and Driffield travel-to-work area;

(2) if he will list the assisted areas which have a lower unemployment rate than the Bridlington and Driffield travel-to-work area.

Mr. Jackson: Information on unemployment rates by travel-to-work areas is available, on the unadjusted basis only, from the NOMIS database in the Library.

Women's Earnings

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will estimate the number of women who have earnings below (a) the tax threshold and (b) the national insurance threshold, broken down into married women, lone parents and single women at the latest date.

Mr. Forth: Broad estimates, based on the new earnings survey and estimates of the number of employees in employment, are that in April 1991 there were 2½ million women employees earning less than the PAYE threshold, of whom 2¼ million earned less than the national insurance lower earnings limit. Using projections from the family expenditure survey, it is estimated that approximately 75 per cent. of each of these categories were married women, 5 per cent. lone parents and 20 per cent. single women.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Residential Special Schools

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any plans to enable residential special schools to opt out of local authority control.

Mr. Fallon: We have no such plans.

Budget Shortfall, Staffordshire

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will meet leaders of Staffordshire county council and head teachers to discuss the remaining shortfall on the education budget arising out of the teachers' pay award.

Mr. Fallon: No. The additional grant which the Government propose to make available, together with the 7·1 per cent. increase in education spending allowed for in the 1992-93 local authority spending finance settlement, should give authorities adequate headroom to cover the cost of the teachers' pay award in full.

BCCI

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science which universities held accounts with the Bank of Commerce and Credit International; and how much money was lost by each university at its collapse.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Detailed information on universities' investments is not held centrally. Monitoring of the financial position of institutions is a matter for the Universities Funding Council. The council understands that no university had invested its own funds in the Bank of Commerce and Credit International.

Further Education

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what were the average unit costs for salaries and other recurrent expenditure categories (a) in further education institutions and (b) in sixth form colleges for the academic years 1988-89 and 1989-90; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Information on expenditure and per student spending is collected on a financial year basis. For the financial years 1988-89 and 1989-90, spending per student in further education institutions was as shown in the table. Information on actual spending in sixth form colleges was not collected separately.

Net institutional expenditure per full time equivalent student	1988-89	1989-90
Salaries and wages	2,360	2,335
Other recurrent institutional costs	500	450
Total	2,860	2,785

Notes:
1. The expenditure data used to derive these figures cover all college-based recurrent spending including teaching and non-teaching staff salaries, premises costs, equipment and supplies, less sales and other miscellaneous receipts but not tuition fees income. They exclude spending on central administration and support services such as transport, as well as all capital expenditure.
2. The figures are derived from LEAs' returns of their spending to the Department of the Environment and of their student enrolments to the Department of Education and Science.
3. 1988-89 data include but 1989-90 data exclude students and expenditure for establishments which transferred to the FCFC sector.

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the average class size (a) in further education institutions and (b) in sixth form colleges for the academic years 1988-89 and 1989-90.

Mr. Eggar: The average class sizes were:

	1988-89	1989-90
Further education institutions[1]	14·5	14·7
Sixth form colleges	12·8	12·6

[1] Includes LEA maintained further education and tertiary colleges.

Primary School Places

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what assessment he has made of the methodology adopted by Surrey county council for forecasting future demand for primary school places carried out for their current age of transfer reorganisation proposals; what are his Department's guidelines on the methodology to be used; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fallon: The reorganisation proposals published by Surrey county council will be decided by my right hon. and learned Friend. As they are currently being considered, we cannot comment at this stage on any of the issues involved, including Surrey's forecasting methodology, as this could be held to have pre-judged our eventual decision.

The Department's guidelines on how authorities should approach the publication of statutory proposals are contained within circular 3/87 "Providing for Quality: The Pattern of Organisation to Age 19", a copy of which is available in the Library. Annex 2 provides guidelines on forecasting pupil numbers.

Special Needs Pupils

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) how many pupils in each local education authority are recorded on form SEN 2 as having statements of special educational need and attending maintained special schools;

(2) how many pupils in each local education authority are recorded on form SEN 2 as having special educational needs and are attending maintained primary, middle and secondary schools;

(3) how many pupils in each local education authority are recorded on form SEN 2 as having special educational needs and are attending non-maintained and independent special schools under arrangements made by the local education authority.

Mr. Fallon: Form SEN2 for 1991 asked LEAs to record information on the placements arranged for children for whom statements of special educational needs were newly made in 1990. Details as submitted by LEAs in respect of the placements made for these children at maintained special schools, ordinary schools, non-maintained special schools and independent schools are given in the table.

St. Fidelis School, Erith

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will pay an official visit to St. Fidelis school in Erith to discuss the capital funding of the school and its proposed expansion.

Mr. Fallon: The capital funding of the proposed expansion project at St. Fidelis school will be one of the factors considered by my right hon. and learned Friend in his decision on proposals published by the governors, under section 13 of the 1980 Education Act, to enlarge the school significantly. It is not our practice to visit schools which are the subject of statutory proposals; but if we did, it would not be possible to discuss any of the issues involved, as this could be held to have pre-judged our eventual decision on the proposals.

Religious Education

Mr. Alison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what are the most recently available estimates for (a) the number of full-time teachers in county secondary schools who teach religious education and who have no post A-level qualification in RE, (b) the numbers of full-time teachers in county secondary schools who teach religious education and who have a post A-level qualification in RE and (c) the number of full-time county secondary teachers with a post A-level qualification in RE who are not teaching the subject.

Mr. Fallon: The information requested is not separately available for county secondary schools.

For all maintained secondary schools in England, the 1988 secondary school staffing survey showed that 14,500 full-time teachers were teaching religious education. Of these, 44 per cent. or 6,400 had a post A-level qualification in religious education. The remaining 56 per cent., or 8,100, who had no recorded post A-level qualification in the subject, were providing only 26 per cent. of all tuition periods in religious education. A further 6,900 full-time teachers with a post A-level qualification in religious education were not teaching the subject.

Mr. Alison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the local education authorities which have adopted agreed syllabuses for religious education since the commencement of the Education Reform Act 1988.

Mr. Eggar: The Department does not collect this information. We are aware, however, that some local education authorities have adopted new agreed syllabuses for religious education since 29 September 1988, including:

Bolton
Cornwall
Derbyshire
Ealing
Newcastle-upon-Tyne
Newham
North Tyneside
Oldham
Rotherham

I believe that other authorities are currently reviewing their syllabuses.

Christian Worship

Mr. Alison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list for each local education authority (a) the number and (b) the percentage of county schools granted total or partial exemption from the requirement to hold broadly Christian acts of worship.

Mr. Eggar: The information is not available in the form requested. I understand that, in the first year following the Education Reform Act 1988, 32 local education authorities reported that determinations had been granted in respect of one or more of their schools and that four LEAs have reported further determinations granted in the second year. I have requested some further analysis of the information which we have and will write to my hon. Friend in due course.

CD-ROM Technology

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he intends to offer financial assistance for CD-ROM applications for the blind and visually handicapped; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fallon: Yes. My right hon. and learned Friend announced on 25 January a scheme to be jointly funded by the Department, the Royal National Institute for the Blind and the Open university to develop software to give blind and visually handicapped pupils full access to CD-ROM materials. The scheme is being managed by the National Council for Educational Technology.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he intends to offer further financial support for the CD-ROM application development scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fallon: Yes. As part of the Government's scheme to introduce and extend the curriculum use of CD-ROM technology in schools, the Department has invited the National Council for Educational Technology to commission the development of a number of new curriculum discs directly supporting the national curriculum. The Department is making £700,000 available towards the costs which will be shared with the disc developers and publishers.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Disaster Relief Unit

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his oral answer of 10 February 1992, Official Report, column 665, if he will give details of the activities of the emergency aid department, showing in which way its work differs from that of the disaster relief unit which it replaced.

Mrs. Chalker: I announced the creation of the ODA's emergency aid department on 14 August 1991. A copy of the announcement has been placed in the Library.

The emergency aid department incorporates the relief work of the disaster unit and the refugee unit and now has an additional section to deal with the new disaster relief initiative, disaster preparedness and the continuing humanitarian crisis in Iraq.

Honduras

Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has any plans for further assistance to the Government of Honduras.

Mrs. Chalker: We have agreed to convert the £5 million non-interest bearing loan 1980 to a grant. A formal agreement will be signed in due course with the Government of Honduras, waiving repayments over the period to 2011.

Population Control

Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contribution Her Majesty's Government will make to the United Nations fund for population activities in 1992.

Mrs. Chalker: We will contribute £9 million to the United Nations fund for population activities in 1992. This is a 20 per cent. increase on our 1991 contribution of £7·5 million, which in turn represented an increase of 25 per cent. over the 1990 contribution of £6 million. Britain will, therefore, have increased its core support to UNFPA by 50 per cent. over the last two years.

Britain's commitment to population as a development priority is very clear, and we aim to further increase the resources available for population assistance under the United Kingdom aid programme. UNFPA will continue to be a major recipient of this assistance.

Cambodia

Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contribution Her Majesty's Government have made to the World Food Programme appeal for internally displaced people in Cambodia.

Mrs. Chalker: I approved a contribution of £250,000 to the World Food Programme, specifically for the needs of the internally displaced people in Cambodia.

Overseas Development (Report)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will obtain for the library of his Department's Overseas Development Administration the report, "Justice Between Peoples—Justice between Generations", published last December.

Mrs. Chalker [holding answer 17 February 1992]: An order for this report has been placed with its publisher, the Environment Liaison Centre International (ELCI) in Nairobi, and will be added to the library of the Overseas Development Administration in due course.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Mr. and Mrs. Orton Chirwa

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to make further representations on behalf of Mr. and Mrs. Orton Chirwa.

Mrs. Chalker: We will continue to raise the case of Orton and Vera Chirwa with the Malawian Government at every suitable opportunity until they are released.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to visit Malawi to discuss the continuing imprisonment of Mr. and Mrs. Chirwa; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: The Secretary of State has no plans to visit Malawi. I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my right hon. Friend the Member for Westmorland and Lonsdale (Mr. Jopling) on 13 February, column 605.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the representations made by Her Majesty's Government to the Malawian Government concerning Mr. and Mrs. Orton Chirwa.

Mrs. Chalker: The Government made representations to the Malawian Government on behalf of Mr. and Mrs. Chirwa in February and March 1984, October 1986, December 1987, July 1990, December 1991, January 1992 —three times—and February 1992.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether his Department will support attempts by the hon. Member to seek to visit Mr. and Mrs. Orton Chirwa in prison in Malawi.

Mrs. Chalker: Any such visit would require the agreement of the Malawian Government. A response to a request by the EC and the United States Governments for access by the International Committee of the Red Cross to all Malawi's prisoners is currently awaited.

Chemical Weapons Organisation

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received regarding the location of the seat of the international organisation to be established under the chemical weapons convention, currently under negotiation in Geneva.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: On 26 November 1991, the Dutch ambassador delivered to the Permanent Under-Secretary at the Foreign and Commonwealth Office an aide-mémoire on The Hague's candidature to host the International Organisation of the Chemical Weapons Convention. On 3 February this year, the Austrian Foreign Minister gave a memorandum on Vienna's candidature to my hon. and learned Friend the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office.

Croatia

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps are being taken to identify the source of the supplies of arms entering Croatia.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The United Nations Security Council has established a committee to monitor military equipment entering Yugoslavia and its former constituent republics in violation of Security Council resolution 713 of 25 September 1991.

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consideration his Department has given to the question of sanctions against Croatia since recognition, in addition to those already in force against Yugoslavia.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: All aspects of our policy towards Croatia are under constant review.

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, during the normal process of discussions with the German Government in the last 14 days, the matter of Croatia has been raised; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Croatia is regularly discussed both bilaterally with our community partners and multilaterally under European political co-operation.

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action his Department will take to ensure that the Government of Croatia adhere to every undertaking given to Her Majesty's Government and the European Community prior to the formal recognition of Croatia's independence.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have made it clear that the development of our relations with Croatia will depend on Croatia's fulfilling its undertakings on minorities' rights.

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will obtain for his departmental library a copy of the Helsinki Watch report on Croatian attrocities against Serbs.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The report referred to has been ordered.

ENVIRONMENT

Countryside (Access)

3. Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to improve access to the countryside.

Mr. Baldry: The rights of way network provides the means by which most people can visit and enjoy the countryside. We are strongly supporting the Countryside Commission in its work with local authorities to improve this network and to bring it all into good order by the year 2000. We have created incentives to landowners to provide greater opportunities for public access through the countryside stewardship scheme, and increased funds for the national park authorities to open up new areas for public enjoyment. We shall announce further measures shortly.

18. Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to improve access to the countryside.

Mr. Trippier: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Caerphilly (Mr. Davies) earlier today by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment.

Environmental Policies

16. Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make a statement on the application of environmental considerations to Government policy as a whole.

Mr. Heseltine: This Government have taken a world lead in integrating environmental policies across Departments. We have established two ministerial committees to develop and monitor environmental initiatives, created a "green" Minister in every Government Department and issued guidance which Departments must follow in assessing the environmental impacts of their policies and programmes. The environment remains high on the Government's agenda. We will continue to provide regular and full progress reports on the implementation of our commitments.

Ozone Layer

19. Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent reports he has received about depletion of the ozone layer.

Mr. Trippier: Reports have been received from the European arctic stratospheric ozone experiment (EASOE) and from the National Aeronautics and Space Administration. These show large quantities of ozone-depleting chemicals present in the stratosphere, and low concentrations of ozone have been observed over mid-latitudes of the northern hemisphere and in the tropics. It is not yet possible to say unequivocally that chemical depletion of ozone is taking place.

Carbon Tax

20. Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will report on progress made with his European Community counterparts on agreements on a Communitywide carbon tax.

Mr. Heseltine: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Harrow, West (Mr. Hughes) on 17 December 1991, and to this morning's debate in European Standing Committee A.

NRA Board of Directors

21. Dr Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has held discussions with the chairman of the National Rivers Authority concerning the reorganisation of the National Rivers Authority's board of directors.

Mr. Baldry: I discuss board appointments with the chairman of the National Rivers Authority whenever there is a need.

Water Pollution

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many water pollution incidents were the subject of prosecutions in each of the last three years; and what was the total amount levied in fines in each year.

Mr. Baldry: The numbers of successful prosecutions for pollution incidents in England and Wales, since the establishment of the National Rivers Authority, are shown, with the total fines imposed.

Period	Total number of prosecutions	Fines (£000)
1 September 1989 to 31 August 1990	395	[1]1,316
1 September 1990 to 31 August 1991	559	773
1 September 1991 to 30 November 1991	150	264

[1] Includes £1 million for Shell UK prosecution.

Prosecution figures are based on the date of the court hearing. Further information is contained in the NRA's report "Water Pollution Incidents in England and Wales 1990", which was published on 27 January. Prosecutions prior to 1 September 1989 would have been brought by the water authorities and comprehensive information is not readily available.

Tidiness

Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the progress of his measures to improve the tidiness of Britain.

Mr. Baldry: The message that is being received by my Department is that local authorities are responding positively to the new duty to keep their land clear of litter and to the other measures incorporated in part IV of the Environmental Protection Act 1990. I am sure that this is having a positive impact on the cleanliness of streets, parks and other places.

Housebuilding

17. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many houses were built by local authorities and by housing associations in 1991.

Sir George Young: Provisional estimates are that in England, in 1991, 14,600 dwellings were completed by housing associations and 7,800 by local authorities. Housing associations are now the main providers of new subsidised housing: they also provide housing by acquisition, renovation, conversion and other means, and their total output is expected to rise to over 50,000 by 1993-94.

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the figures for housebuilding in the public sector in the current year to the latest available date; what was the comparable figure for 1978-79; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: Provisional estimates are that in England, during the nine months April to December 1991, 5,500 dwellings were completed for local authorities, new towns and Government Departments and 11,900 for housing associations. In April to December 1978 the equivalent figures were 64,500 and 15,700. I also refer the hon. Member to the answer given today to the hon. Member for Wentworth (Mr. Hardy) by my hon. Friend the Minister for Housing and Planning.

Rural Housing

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will encourage the Housing Corporation to direct a higher proportion of its funds to rural areas.

Mr. Yeo: The Housing Corporation's rural programme is being steadily expanded from 1,500 homes this year to 1,850 in 1992-93 and 2,250 in 1993-94. In addition, the corporation has undertaken to make good this year and next a shortfall of over 700 homes against its target for 1990-91.

Air Quality

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on air quality.

Mr. Trippier: I refer the hon. Member to chapter 11 of the White Paper "This Common Inheritance" (Cm 1200) and to chapter 8 of "This Common Inheritance: The First Year Report" (Cm 1655). These give a full account of our progress in improving air quality and our commitments to further action.

Local Authorities (Unitary Plans)

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the development of unitary plans by local authorities.

Sir George Young: One unitary development plan has been adopted. Other metropolitan authorities have plans in preparation.

Heveningham Hall

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a further statement on Heveningham hall.

Mr. Heseltine: No. I have nothing to add now to my answer to the hon. Member on 10 December, column 367.

Redundant Farm Buildings

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will issue guidance to local planning authorities to allow for the granting of a greater proportion than hitherto of applications making use of redundant farm buildings.

Mr. Yeo: Guidance on the re-use of farm and other rural buildings is in planning policy guidance note 7, "The Countryside and the Rural Economy", published in January 1992. This states that proposals should not be rejected unless there are specific and convincing planning reasons that cannot be overcome by attaching reasonable conditions to the planning permission. Unlike the first edition of PPG7, it says that it should not normally be necessary to consider whether the building is no longer needed for its present purposes.

Mixed Housing Developments

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he is taking to promote mixed housing developments of both public and private housing on local authority land; in what proportions; what the position was in each of the last 10 years; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: Right to buy, estate action, city challenge, housing action trusts and other initiatives introduced by this Government are already successfully promoting diversification of tenure in areas of local authority housing. Increased competition for housing investment programme resources and the requirement to develop housing strategies will further encourage local authorities to mix the tenure of estates. Details of sales of local authority land and buildings can be found in the quarterly housing and construction statistics published by my Department.

Recycling

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent representation he has received from the Association of District Councils about recycling.

Mr. Baldry: The Government have frequent contact with local authorities and the local authority associations on a wide range of matters concerning recycling.

Council Estates

Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how the Government are encouraging tenant participation in the management of council estates.

Sir George Young: The Department has increased its grants for the promotion and development of tenant management initiatives on local authority estates by over a third since last year. In addition, it has contributed towards the costs of developing the new national certificate in tenant participation and is grant-aiding moves to establish a national housing and tenant resource centre. Last week it began a national distribution of the tenant participation video and leaflet which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State launched with the council tenants charter.

East Thames Corridor

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the environmental impact of the development of the east Thames corridor.

Mr. Trippier: My right hon. Friend has appointed consultants to examine the opportunities for development in the east Thames corridor. They are considering also the potential for the environmental enhancement of the corridor and taking account of the need to conserve areas of historical and environmental sensitivity.

Planning and Development

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he next intends to meet the European Commissioner for environmental matters to discuss planning and development matters.

Mr. Yeo: I discuss a wide range of issues, including planning and development matters whenever I meet the Commissioner. Following our meeting on 21 January, no further meeting has yet been arranged.

Compulsory Competitive Tendering

Mr. Carttiss: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the estimated savings made by local authorities as a result of compulsory competitive tendering; and what further savings could be made through its extension.

Mr. Key: Research has shown average savings of 6 per cent. in the annual value of contracts for all services subject to competition under the Local Government Act 1988. Higher average savings, in the range of 10 to 15 per cent. of annual value, have been achieved in the case of refuse collection and building cleaning. The Government believe that the demonstrable gains in efficiency and value for money stimulated by the introduction of competition should be extended to a wider range of local services.

SSAs

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the counties which have obtained a higher standard spending assessment settlement per unit of population in the current year than Warwickshire; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: The following counties have a higher standard spending assessment expressed in pounds per adult than Warwickshire for 1991-92: Avon, Bedfordshire, Berkshire, Buckinghamshire, Cambridgeshire, Cheshire, Cleveland, Cornwall, Cumbria, Derbyshire, Devon, Durham, East Sussex, Essex, Gloucestershire, Hampshire, Hereford and Worcester, Hertfordshire, Humberside, Isle of Wight, Kent, Lancashire, Leicestershire, Lincolnshire, Norfolk, Northamptonshire, Northumberland, North Yorkshire, Nottinghamshire, Oxfordshire, Shropshire, Somerset, Staffordshire, Suffolk and Wiltshire.

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will now direct his officials to have talks with local government officers in Warwickshire about the county's financial situation;

(2) what advice or assistance is available to county councils which represent to him that the results of the standard spending assessment formula are disadvantageous to them.

Mr. Portillo: When the provisional standard spending assessments were announced on 26 November, local authorities were invited to make representations up to 31 December. Ministers met delegations from local authorities up to 9 January.

The final standard spending assessment formulae for 1992-93 have now been approved by the House. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has made clear his intentions with regard to charge capping. It is now for Warwickshire and all other authorities to determine their budgets for 1992-93. It would not be appropriate for the Department to become involved in budgeting decisions. Any authority designated for capping will have the opportunity to make representations if it decides to challenge the level of the cap proposed by the Secretary of State.

Housing Revenue Accounts

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table of all local authorities in England, grouped regionally, showing the estimated notional deficit or surplus on their housing revenue account for 1991-92, if expenditure on rent rebates and subsidy towards those costs were excluded from the calculation of housing revenue accounts subsidy for that year but rents, debt repayment and management and management expenditure remained the same.

Mr. Yeo: I have arranged for the information to be placed in the Library of the House.

Pipelines

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if the laying or construction of notifiable pipelines is granted permitted development rights under the Town and Country Planning and General Development Order 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: Public gas suppliers within the meaning of section 7 of the Gas Act 1986 have permitted development rights under part 17F of schedule 2 of the Town and Country Planning General Development Order 1988, including the laying underground of notifiable pipelines.

SSSIs

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many sites if special scientific interest have been denotified in each yeaer since 1981; what was the total hectarage involved in each year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: The information is not available in the form requested. Since 1981, the total area of land de-notified in England, primarily as the result of boundary amendments to existing SSSIs is 12,699·8 hectares involving 440 SSSIs.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many sites of special scientific interest were visited under the site integrity monitoring programme for the latest 12-month period for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: In England, 1,597 SSSIs were visited in the period from 1 April to 31 December 1991. The aim is for all SSSIs to be covered by site integrity monitoring, with a visit to each site at least every three years.

Urban Programme Support, Hackney

Mr. Norris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the projects in the London borough of Hackney which have received inner cities partnership or urban programme support in each year since 1987-88, showing in each case the level of support and the benefits obtained for local people.

Mr. Key: The Department has approved more than 400 projects under the Hackney urban programme—formerly called Hackney inner-city partnership—since 1987-88. Individual projects started each year within the Hackney urban programme (UP) are listed in annual reports available from Hackney council. Further details on UP funded projects are also available from the council.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will state the difference between the standard spending assessments relating to capital charges allotted to local authorities and the amount which they needed to disburse on such expenditure for the year 1991-92, where that difference exceeded £1 million, together with the name of the local authority and the excess amount so paid.

Mr. Key [holding answer 17 February 1992]: The capital financing element of the 1991-92 SSAs totalled £2,950·7 million. The latest information available to my Department indicates that local authorities have budgeted to spend £2,973·3 million on capital financing in 1991-92.

The table shows the capital financing SSA element, the equivalent budgeted net revenue expenditure on capital financing, and the difference between these two amounts in 1991-92 for those local authorities where the difference exceeds £1 million.

Council House Sales

Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate he has made of the total capital receipts available to local authorities from the sale of council houses in the last 12 months; and what was the total for the immediately preceding 12-month period.

Sir George Young: Receipts from the sale of council dwellings constitute the large majority of housing capital receipts. Our current estimate of usable housing capital receipts available to authorities from sales and disposals in 1991-92 is about £450 million (projected from the half-year data available). The value of 1990-91 usable housing capital receipts, reported by authorities, is £625 million. In addition to spending from usable receipts, councils may also finance expenditure from new borrowing, authorised by credit approvals, and by contributions from revenue accounts, and many also have unspent usable receipts from previous years.

Service Pensioners

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) whether he gives guidance on local authorities' employment policies, to seek to prevent the councils as employers from discriminating against prospective employees on the ground that they are in receipt of a pension as a result of having served in the armed forces; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will introduce proposals for legislation making it illegal for local authorities to discriminate against job applicants because they are in receipt of a pension as a result of having served in the armed forces; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will list all those local authorities who have an official policy of discriminating against job applicants on the ground that they are in receipt of a pension from the armed forces.

Mr. Key: Local authorities are responsible for their own recruitment policies. Like other employers, they are free to employ whom they wish, subject to the provisions of general employment law.

My Department holds no records of local authorities which discriminate against job applicants receiving pensions from the armed forces. Any legislation on this issue would be a matter for the Department of Employment. There are no plans to introduce legislation or provide guidance in this area.

Section 7 of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989 requires that, subject to other employment law, all appointments to local authority posts are made on merit. Within the terms of the selection criteria applied by local authorities, a successful applicant must be capable of meeting the requirements of the post applied for.

Assured Tenancies

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the number of short assured tenancies for the year 1991.

Mr. Yeo: The numbers of assured shorthold tenancies can only be estimated from survey evidence. The Office of Population Censuses and Surveys 1990 private renters survey estimated that there was a total of 136,000 assured shorthold tenancies in mid-1990. This is the most recent figure available.

Empty Properties

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the number of empty properties in the private sector.

Mr. Yeo: Estimates of empty dwellings reported by English local authorities in their annual housing investment programme returns for April 1991 amounted to some 640,000 dwellings, or 4·2 per cent. of the private housing stock.

Large Markets

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any plans to exclude large commercial markets from permitted development as defined in schedule 2, part 4 of the Town and Country Planning: General Development Order 1988, S.I. 1913.

Mr. Yeo: My right hon. Friend has no plans to make such an exclusion.

Lead Water Pipes

Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will assist households on low incomes with the costs of replacing lead water supply pipes in dwellings.

Mr. Yeo: My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Wales and I have today written to local authority associations, the water industry, and other organisations, seeking their views on proposals to extend minor works assistance, under the provisions of part VIII of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989. We propose that local authorities be given wider scope in providing discretionary assistance to meet the cost of replacing lead water supply pipes to all owner occupiers or tenants on income-related benefits.

This will complement the action water companies are taking to reduce plumbosolvency in water supplies and replace their section of lead service pipes. Where lead levels in water nevertheless remain high because of lead plumbing in houses or flats, the local authority will be able to help all those least able to meet the costs of these works, especially families with young children. This is intended to encourage modernisation of homes and protect public health while at the same time targeting resources where they are most needed.

A copy of the consultation paper has been deposited in the Library.

African Elephant

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received in respect of proposals to move the African elephant from appendix I to the convention on international trade in endangered species to appendix II; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: I have held a number of meetings with a wide variety of elephant interest groups and independent experts.

The Government have repeatedly stated their full and unflinching commitment to maintaining the current ban on trade in elephant products as long as it is necessary to ensure the survival and recovery of African elephant populations. Moreover, there is no question of our agreeing to any changes which would not meet the stringent conditions specified when the ban was agreed in 1989.

We are not convinced that the time is right for a resumption in the trade in elephant products. We therefore intend to press strongly at the forthcoming conference of the parties to CITES in Kyoto for the retention of African elephants in appendix I to the convention.

Pollution Victims

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will name the parties to whom his Department has sent, and with whom his Department has consulted on the OECD produced recommendations on compensation for victims of accidental pollution.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer of 14 February 1992]: The OECD council has not yet adopted the draft recommendation on compensation of victims of accidental pollution. Officials from the Department of the Environment, the Department of Trade and Industry and the Health and Safety Executive have contributed to the OECD's work and in doing so have maintained contact with representatives of British and European insurers.

Property Services Agency

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps are being taken to offer employees of the Property Services Agency in Northern Ireland redundancy in anticipation of the privatisation of the Property Services Agency; whether the Property Services Agency in Northern Ireland will remain a separate entity after privatisation: and what steps he is taking to enable employees to make a considered decision upon the option of redundancy prior to the availability of details of the privatisation proposals.

Mr. Yeo [holding answer 18 February 1992]: PSAs work in Northern Ireland is handled by the PSA building management (BM) business. Ministers will review BM's progress towards privatisation later this year. It is therefore premature to speculate on the form which privatisation might take, and whether Northern Ireland should remain a separate entity.

In order to reduce manpower levels and thereby enable the PSAs businesses to compete more effectively, a voluntary early retirement/severance (VER) scheme, open to all non-industrial staff was launched throughout PSAs in late 1990. The benefits paid to those accepted for VER are the same as those which would be provided on compulsory redundancy. Officers who are uncertain whether to apply can request an estimate of their financial entitlements before making up their minds. Decisions on whether to offer VER, are taken in the light of business operational needs.

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many meetings or other discussions his officials have had with local government officers in Warwickshire about the county's standard spending assessment in 1991 and 1992; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: Warwickshire have had the opportunity —in common with all other authorities—to make written representations on our settlement proposals and to request meetings with Ministers. Officials have not met officers from Warwickshire to discuss the authority's SSA although regular meetings are held with the local authority associations to discuss general SSA issues. Warwickshire did, however, meet me and officials in the context of community charge limitation for 1991-92 and my hon. Friends representing Warwickshire constituencies have frequently taken the opportunity to discuss the methodology underlying standard spending assessments with Ministers in this Department.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Disability

Mr. McMaster: To ask the hon. Member for Berwick upon Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission, what percentage of the work force of the House are disabled.

Mr. Beith: The number of registered disabled persons employed by the Commission represents 0·6 per cent. of the total House of Commons staff. That figure does not include registered disabled persons employed by Members or organisations in the House for which the Commission does not at present have responsibility.

HOUSE OF COMMONS COMMISSION

Clerk's and Library Departments

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the hon. Member for Berwick upon Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission how many staff in the Clerk's Department and in the Library Department are at grade 5 or above.

Mr. Beith: The relevant figures are 34 and five respectively.

DEFENCE

Gibraltar

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assistance has been given to Gibraltar, in each of the last three years, to train workers made redundant by the run down of the dockyards; whether training and re-training places are open to all those previously employed in the dockyards, regardless of nationality; what representations he has received on these matters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The Gibraltar dockyard ceased to operate under MOD management on 31 December 1984. With effect from 1 January 1985 the dockyard passed to the Government of Gibraltar and was operated on its behalf by Gibraltar Shiprepair Ltd. The provision of assistance and training for staff made redundant since the transfer is not, in consequence, a matter for the Ministry of Defence.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the WE177s withdrawn from (a) Royal Navy and (b) RAF service will be dismantled or put into storage.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence announced in the House on 14 October, Official Report, column 58, that we would be making a substantial reduction in the numbers of free-fall WE177 bombs in the coming years and that in normal circumstances WE177s will not be deployed at sea. All WE177s withdrawn from service will be dismantled.

Scottish Battalions

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what will be the permanent establishment of the battalion to be formed by the amalgamation of the 4 (Volunteer) Parachute battalion and the 15 (Volunteer) Parachute battalion; what will be the minimum size of each of the five detachments of the Scottish company within the amalgamated battalion; and what level of funding and logistical support will be provided to each of the five Scottish detachments.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The permanent establishment will be 490, conforming to the new standard being adopted by all 36 Territorial Army infantry battalions. Rifle companies of the new battalion will have the same formal establishment as those of the remainder of the Territorial Army infantry, increased by an allowance for recruits and where support elements of the battalion are allocated to the company. The Scottish Company of the new battalion will be able to overbear. The size of each detachment will reflect the ability of the company and its detachments to recruit and retain personnel.

In line with the remainder of the Territorial Army, the Scottish Company of 4 para will be properly supported and funded to carry out the roles requested of it. It is envisaged that detachments will be based on shared Territorial Army centres at their current locations, enabling them to draw upon shared facilities and administrative support.

HEALTH

Bed Availability

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he proposes to take on bed availability following the recent report by the Audit Commission.

Mr. Dorrell: We expect NHS managers to review local services in the light of the Audit Commission's report on the use of medical beds in acute hospitals and the further detailed work the Audit Commission will carry out in all health authorities and NHS trusts over the next 12 months.

Hospital Beds

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it his policy to collect statistics on the occasions when no beds are available, other than through the accident and emergency units, in each hospital and district health authority.

Mr. Dorrell: There are no plans to do so. It would not be appropriate to collect this information centrally. We expect managers at local level to monitor bed use and availability.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how he proposes to ensure fair and open competition in the NHS and the NHS trusts for potential female applicants for senior management posts; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The NHS is committed to equal opportunities in employment. The Department launched an initiative in June 1991 to put women's employment issues on the main NHS managerial agenda. In order to take full advantage of the potential of women in the NHS, the NHS management executive has signed up as a campaign member of Opportunity 2000. Among the key goals set is the need to ensure that more women are appointed at the most senior levels as firm evidence of the commitment to making best use of all staff. Detailed guidance on how these goals may be achieved, and the results monitored, is to be issued in due course.

Toxocara Canis

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research his Department has carried out into which domestic and wild animals in the United Kingdom act as hosts for toxocara canis.

Mr. Dorrell: The Department has carried out no such research.

Lead Poisoning

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what studies his Department is conducting into the dangers of lead poisoning, especially for children; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The Department is not at present carrying out any such studies. There has been very extensive research into the dangers of lead poisoning, with particular attention to neuropsychological effects in children. Studies of the latter, undertaken in the United Kingdom and elsewhere, were reviewed in 1988 by an advisory group of the Medical Research Council, the main agency through which the Government support biomedical and clinical research in the United Kingdom. The advisory group concluded that "any effects of lead at the exposure levels seen in the United Kingdom are very small and cannot be detected with any certainty . . . but the evidence for an association between body lead burden and IQ is now strong. In view of these conclusions it would be prudent to continue to reduce the environmental lead to which children are exposed."

Since 1974 it has been the policy of successive Governments to contain and reduce exposure to lead wherever practicable, particularly in those circumstances where people are most exposed. Successful measures have been taken to reduce lead exposure through petrol, water, air, food, industrial emissions, paint, cosmetics, ceramic glazes and toys, and monitoring programmes have shown a continuing fall in blood lead levels in children and adults.

Ozone Layer

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consideration he has given to Government action to protect British people from the likely effects of the depletion of the ozone layer over the Arctic and northern latitudes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: I refer the hon. Member to the replies I gave the hon. Member for Dewsbury (Mrs. Taylor) on 20 December 1991 at columns 353-54. The Department proposes to seek advice from the Committee on Medical Aspects of Radiation in the Environment (COMARE) on what further action may be appropriate.

Whitley Council Appeals Machinery

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will make a statement outlining the legal provisions relating to the abolition of the General Whitley Council appeals machinery as set out in section 32 of the General Whitley Council;

(2) if he will explain the reasons for the abolition of the General Whitley Council appeals machinery; and what consultations he has had with Whitley Council representatives before deciding to do so;

(3) if he will set out the machinery he proposes to put in place of the provisions now revoked as a result of his abolition of section 32 of the General Whitley Council.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The new conditions provide for employing authorities to introduce more straightforward local procedures after consultation with staff and local staff representatives.

Section 32 of the General Whitley Council provisions was seen increasingly as a cumbersome and ineffective way of handling differences of opinion between employing authorities and individual members of staff. Individual grievances which were not resolved at employing authority level were referred to a second level of appeal and, if again unresolved, to a third national level of appeal. There was no provision which required such appeals—which could be taken forward only by a professional organisation or trade union representing an aggrieved employee—to be finally resolved, and so many cases, some of which took a year or more to go through the system, were never resolved. This system did little to foster good industrial relations locally.

The management side of the General Whitley Council were in negotiations with the staff side for about four years to change the procedures until August 1991 when the talks broke down.

In the light of lack of progress the existing agreement was revoked and replaced by new conditions, using powers in paragraph 10 of schedule 5 of the National Health Services Act 1977 and regulations 3 and 4 of the National Health Service (Remuneration and Conditions of Service) Regulations 1991.

The new machinery is as follows:

Procedure for settling differences about conditions of service

1. The procedures set out below apply where an officer is aggrieved in relation to any matter affecting his conditions of service, but do not apply to settling differences relating to:—
   (a) dismissal or disciplinary matters,
   (b) disputes appropriate to resolution in accordance with section 33 of the General Whitley Council Handbook,
   (c) organisational change, or
   (d) matters for which it has been agreed that specific Whitley Council procedures will apply.
2. Subject to paragraph 1 above, an officer to whom this procedure applies may seek redress of his grievance in accordance with procedures determined by the employing authority. Those procedures shall be determined by the employing authority following consultation with staff and local staff representatives. The procedures shall be designed to provide for the speedy resolution of the grievance of an individual officer or servant as close as possible to its source. In establishing the procedures, regard should be had to good industrial relations practice such as that recommended by ACAS.
3. The procedures determined by employing authorities shall provide for the reference of grievances to a person or body other than the employing authority where the parties agree, in relation to a specific grievance, that the reference is appropriate.
4. Where the grievance relates to the application of a national agreement reached through the National Whitley Council, either party may seek clarification as to the intended interpretation of the agreement from the joint secretaries of the National Whitley Council if those secretaries agree to provide that clarification.

Marriages

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any plans to introduce legislation to require those responsible for conducting marriage ceremonies to require documentary evidence of the age, identity and marital status of those who are marrying; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The Government, in their White Paper "Registration: proposals for change"—Cm. 939—said that it will legislate to give to registrars and to the clergy of the Church of England and the Church in Wales powers to call for documentary evidence of the age, identity and marital status of those who are marrying. The legislation will be introduced as soon as parliamentary time allows.

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what restrictions exist on a registrar of civil marriages in England and Wales informing the appropriate authorities that an individual seeking to marry has overstayed his or her permitted visit to the United Kingdom.

Mr. Dorrell: Superintendent registrars are statutory officers exercising functions under the Marriage and Registration Acts under the direction of the Registrar General. They are not agents of the immigration service and the fact that an individual has overstayed his or her permitted visit to the United Kingdom does not constitute a lawful impediment to that person marrying in this country. However, if a superintendent registrar has good reason to suspect that the proposed marriage of a person from abroad has been arranged for the sole purpose of evading statutory immigration controls he or she is instructed to report the facts to the Registrar General. If the Registrar General is satisfied that the marriage is purely one of convenience, then the facts will be passed on to the Home Office.

Children Act 1989

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals he has for monitoring implementation of the Children Act 1989.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I have today issued a paper on the Department of Health's strategy for monitoring implementation of the Children Act. Copies of the paper have also been placed in the Library.

The monitoring strategy relies in the main on —an enhanced collection of management information returns covering the key provisions of the Children Act.

—social services inspectorate's programme of a major survey of local authorities' progress towards implementation of the Act coupled with small scale inspections and development work.

Information drawn from these sources will form the basis of my report to Parliament at the end of 1992 on the first year of the Children Act in operation.

Cervical Smears

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list each district health authority which are (a) reaching the one month target, (b) not reaching the one month target for cervical smear tests and (c) the number of weeks taken to process cervical smear tests in districts which are not meeting the target (i) currently, (ii) last year and (iii) five years ago.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 10 February 1992]: As at December 1991, the latest available date, the following district health authorities were not reaching the one month target for cervical smear tests:

District	Length of backlog weeks
Bradford	5
Huntingdon	5
Parkside	5
Sheffield	5
South Bedfordshire	5
Northampton	7
Camberwell	11

Action is being taken by all the health authorities concerned to bring the remaining backlogs within the one month target.

All other district health authorities were reaching the one month target at December 1991.

In March 1991, the following district health authorities were not reaching the one month target for cervical smear tests:

District	Length of backlog (weeks)
Barnet	9
Basildon and Thurrock	6·5
Bath	12
Brighton	8
Bromley	8
Cambridge	7
Croydon	5
Enfield	12
Hampstead	6
Haringey	5
Huntingdon	5
Merton and Sutton	5
North East Essex	6·5
Nottingham	5
Parkside	9
Redbridge	12
Scunthorpe	7
Shropshire	23
South Derbyshire	5
Southend	12
South Tees	6·5
Stockport[1]	13
Sunderland	6
Tameside[1]	7
Tunbridge	6
Waltham Forest	5

[1] July 1991.

All other districts were reaching the one month target at March 1991.

Information on the processing of cervical smear tests is not available for five years ago. The one month target was introduced in 1988, following the setting up of the NHS cervical screening programme.

For information relating to July 1991 I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave her on 16 July 1991 at column 145.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

United Nations Trade Conference

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether his Department was represented at the Eighth United Nations Conference on Trade and Development in Cartagena, Colombia.

Mr. Sainsbury: As Minister for Trade, I attended the opening ceremony on 8 February 1992 and made a statement on 10 February. Officials from my Department will be in attendance throughout the conference.

Hong Kong (Ministerial Visits)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether, on his visit to Hong Kong in September 1988, the then Parliamentary Under-Secretary for Trade and Industry, the hon. Member for Warwickshire, North (Mr. Maude), took part in party political activities in addition to official duties.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 13 February 1992]: The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Trade and Industry arrived in Hong Kong in the morning of 27 September 1988 and left in the afternoon of 29 September. His programme included a breakfast with Conservatives Abroad.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether, on his visits to Hong Kong in (a) June 1988 and (b) April 1989, the then Secretary of State took part in party political activities in addition to official duties.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 13 February 1992]: Lord Young arrived in Hong Kong in the afternoon of 19 June 1988 and left in the evening of 22 June. His programme included early evening drinks with Conservatives Abroad.

Lord Young returned to Hong Kong in the early evening of 16 April 1989 and left the same evening. This programme did not include any political engagements.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether, on his visit to Hong Kong in September 1990, the Minister for Trade took part in party political activities in addition to official duties.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 13 February 1992]: The Minister for Trade arrived in Hong Kong in the afternoon of 22 September 1990 and he left in the afternoon of Wednesday 26 September. His programme did not include any political activities.

Electricity Prices

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what reduction he expects in production or employment in 1992-93 in those industries which are heavy users of energy as a result of the recent and proposed increases in electricity prices; and what steps he proposes to take to ensure that such developments are minimised.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 18 February 1992]: The Government are aware of the concerns of large users about electricity prices, and have asked them for more detailed information. But they cannot predict the effects of changes in electricity prices on production or employment.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1991

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many applications have been made under section 57 of the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1991 for the exercise of the powers conferred by schedule 5 to that Act; and how many authorisations have been granted;

(2) how many notices have been issued under paragraph 2 of schedule 5 to the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1991 requiring (a) the attendance of persons or (b) the production of documents;

(3) how many applications have been made for the issue of warrants under paragraph 3 of schedule 5 to the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1991.

Dr. Mawhinney: My right hon. Friend proposes to publish on an annual basis statistics relating to the use made of these provisions.

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he will list all the highways (a) closed or (b) diverted by orders made under section 25 of the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1991 or the equivalent provision in earlier Acts giving in each case the date of the order.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information relating to the period prior to 16 May 1991 is not available in the format requested and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Since 16 May 1991, the closure of the following roads has been directed by order of the Secretary of State.

Under section 19A(1)(a) of the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1987

1. The Movarran Road between Ordnance Survey grid references 18107304 and 18027285, in the townland of Movarran, County Fermanagh—directed by order dated 29 May 1991.
2. The border crossing point between Ordnance Survey grid references 15667188 and 15727180, in the townland of Rushindoo, to the north of Kesh, County Fermanagh—directed by order dated 5 June 1991.
3. The border crossing point between Ordnance Survey grid references 44002264 and 44142287, in the townland of Clonkee, to the south-east of Newtownbutler, County Fermanagh—directed by order dated 21 June 1991.

Under section 25 of the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1991

1./2. The Killymeal Road, near its junction with Viewfort, Dungannon, County Tyrone and Orpheus Road, near its junction with Killymeal Road, Dungannon, County Tyrone—directed by order dated 24 September 1991.

3. The Antrim Road at Ordnance Survey grid reference 14858187, near Aldergrove International Airport, County Antrim—directed by order dated 29 September 1991.

The Secretary of State has not directed the diversion of any road in this period.

GP Fund Holding

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement detailing communications to general medical practitioners encouraging fund-holding practices outlining what incentives exist and detailing the extent and timing of contact on the matter with health and social services boards with whom the general medical practitioners have their contracts.

Mr. Hanley: A detailed programme setting out how the GP fund-holding scheme will work in Northern Ireland and inviting expressions of interest was sent to all general practitioners on 16 December 1991. Expressions of interest will be accepted up to the beginning of March 1992 after which there will be a process of assessment in which health and social services boards will be closely involved.

Ballot Papers

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps he is taking to monitor the number of persons refused a ballot paper at the forthcoming general election because they are not in possession of the correct identification document.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Government have no plans to undertake such an exercise. The requirement for voters to produce a specified document at elections in Northern Ireland is well known and well advertised. Every elector in Northern Ireland either has or is in a position to obtain at least one suitable document free of charge.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Potato Marketing Board

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his policy regarding the future of the Potato Marketing Board and the potato marketing scheme.

Mr. Curry: The Government's policy is to encourage the Potato Marketing Board to respond to the needs of the market and to keep the potato marketing scheme under review in the light of developments in the European Community and elsewhere.

Common Agricultural Policy

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will update his answer of 17 June 1991, Official Report, column 20, giving revised figures for the common agricultural policy budget in 1991 and 1992, and forecasts for 1993; if he will state whether forecasts for 1993 incorporate changes in expenditure as a result of the current EC Commission proposals for CAP reforms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The table gives the information requested for the years up to 1992. A forecast for 1993 is not yet available as it would depend on decisions that have yet to be taken.

[2] Other agricultural expenditure comprises mainly 50 per cent. of 5-year set-aside scheme, income aids (since 1990) and agricultural inspections.
[3] 1991 figures consist of provisional outturn (guarantee section and part of other CAP expenditure) and budget provisions (the rest).

Hungarian Meat Fraud

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about the problems encountered in the Hungarian meat fraud, referred to in his Ministry's expenditure plans 1992-93 to 1994-95.

Mr. Gummer: This matter is already under consideration by the courts and further investigations are continuing. In the circumstances, I am unable to comment.

WALES

Farm Incomes

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what were the net farm income figures for Wales for each year since 1985-86 to 1989-90, inclusive, for (a) upland farms and (b) lowland farms that are involved in cattle and sheep mixed farming; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: Net farm income figures for lowland livestock farms have not been published separately since 1984-85. The extension of the less-favoured areas (LFAs) in that year led to a change in classification of a substantial number of lowland livestock farms to LFA livestock farms, and the resulting lowland livestock sample figures became statistically unreliable. Figures for hill and upland cattle and sheep farms for the period 1985-86 to 1989-90 are:

1985-86	9·0
1986-87	9·3
1987-88	12·5
1988-89	16·4
1989-90	10·9

Usk Barrage

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received regarding the (a) environmental, (b) agricultural and (c) groundwater impact of the proposed Usk barrage; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I have received a number of representations on the environmental impact of the proposed Usk barrage.

Chiropody Services

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement regarding the provision of chiropody services in Monmouth and in Gilwern, Gwent.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The provision of chiropody services is the responsibility of the health authority. There has been a temporary withdrawal of service at Gilwern due to accommodation problems, but the problem has now been resolved and the health authority will resume the service shortly. Meanwhile, chiropody services are available at Brynmawr and Abergavenny.

Metal Production

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proportion of (a) United Kingdom iron, (b) crude steel and (c) tinplate is produced within Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: In 1991, 35 per cent. of United Kingdom iron production, 35 per cent. of United Kingdom crude steel production, and 100 per cent. of United Kingdom tinplate production took place within Wales.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much steel is made per head in Wales; and what were the equivalent figures for 1976, 1981 and 1986.

Mr. David Hunt: In 1981, 176 tonnes of raw steel were produced per steel worker in Wales. The equivalent figures for 1986 and 1991 were 239 tonnes and 341 tonnes respectively. No figures are available for 1976.

Fish Farm Appeals, Milford Haven

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he is now in a position to announce his decision on fish farm licence appeals in Milford Haven.

Mr. David Hunt: There is one appeal outstanding in this area. My officials wrote to the appellants over a year ago requesting information that is needed before I can determine the appeal. No information has yet been received, but my officials have recently written again, asking whether the appellants are able to provide the information or now wish to withdraw the appeal.

Electricity Supply

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of United Kingdom electricity is generated in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply that I gave him on 24 July 1991 at column 628.

Grant Aid

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what assessment he has made of the extent to which grant in aid militates against the creation of a level playing field for commercial undertakings;

(2) how many commercial undertakings, and at what cost, have been grant-aided in each of the past 10 years;

(3) how many new jobs have been created in each of the past 10 years as a result of grant-aiding commercial undertakings;

(4) what assessment he has made of the effect upon the relative competitiveness of self-financing companies trading in the same sector as companies in receipt of grant aid.

Mr. David Hunt: Information in the form requested is not available within my Department.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the planned expansion of environmentally sensitive areas in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: On 20 November 1991, I announced that, following consultations with the Countryside Council for Wales, I had asked my officials to undertake a detailed analysis of four locations in Wales that I am considering designating as environmentally sensitive areas in 1992-93. The four locations are Anglesey, the Clwydian range, Preseli and Radnor. It is my intention to designate at least two of those locations as ESAs in 1992-93, but final decisions cannot be taken until the more detailed work has been completed. I will announce my final selection in due course.

Urban Aid

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a table indicating for each of Delyn, Dinefwr, Dwyfor, Islwyn, Neath and Llanelli district authorities in Wales (a) their position on the 1991 revised index of the Welsh deprivation table, (b) the total urban aid granted to each of the authorities over the past three years and (c) the urban aid per capita this represents in each instance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett [holding answer 18 February 1992]: The following table sets out details of urban programme allocations for each of the three years 1990-91 to 1992-93 for the district councils in Delyn, Dinefwr, Dwyfor, Islwyn, Neath and Llanelli. The total urban programme allocation per capita for each of the local authorities is also shown.

Urban programme allocations to local authorities in Wales are now being targeted at strategy-based projects and projects within the most deprived wards. Nevertheless, traditional factors, such as quality of bids submitted by local authorities and competition for finite resources, remain important elements in determining which projects are approved.

Local Authority	Position on deprivation table: revised index 1991	UP allocations (£) (including supplementary allocations) 1990-91	1991-92	1992-93	Total £	Population (thousands) (mid-1990 estimates)	UP per capita (£)

Local Government Finance

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the average increase in community charge bills in 1992-93 compared with 1991-92 in Newport, West that is attributable to the change in community charge reduction scheme.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett [holding answer 17 February 1992]: For the three years of the scheme the figures are:

Cardiologists

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the number of cardiologists per million people in Wales at the last available date.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett [holding answer 17 February 1992]: At 30 September 1990; there were 4·6 (whole-time equivalent) consultants with a main specialty of cardiology in Wales, which equates to 1·6 per million population.

There were also six consultants with a main speciality of general medicine who were recorded as having an interest in cardiology; ie, undertaking at least one session per week in cardiology.

Health Authorities (NHS Expenditure)

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much money was spent by the NHS Wales, per capita, in the area of (a) East Dyfed health authority and (b) Pembrokeshire health authority in 1991-92.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett [holding answer 18 February 1992]: Information is not available on the geographical distribution of expenditure by the Dyfed family health services authority as between the areas served by the East Dyfed and Pembrokeshire health authorities. It is therefore not possible to provide figures on overall NHS expenditure per capita in East Dyfed and Pembrokeshire.

Indeed, some of the expenditure on hospital and community services within these districts will in fact relate to cross-boundary flows of patients from other parts of the country. Similarly, there are cross-boundary flows of patients from East Dyfed and Pembrokeshire to other districts, and that needs to be taken into account if valid comparisons of per capita expenditure are to be made as between the two authorities.

The following information therefore relates to the prospective per capita revenue expenditure on hospital and community health services by these authorities in 1991-92 on behalf of their resident populations, irrespective of where those services are provided.

Pembrokeshire	400

The figures are inclusive of capital charges based upon the recent revised estimates of their incidence across authorities. Capital expenditure is excluded, since that cannot be apportioned on a resident population basis.

As indicated in my right hon. Friend's announcement of allocations for 1992-93 on 4 February 1992, at column 125-28, under the new resident population funding arrangements both authorities are set to benefit from higher than average rates of revenue growth over the next seven years as they progress towards their weighted capitation formula shares. Indeed, that process has already begun with the allocation of discretionary revenue cash increases of 7·6 per cent. and 8 per cent. respectively to the East Dyfed and Pembrokeshire health authorities in 1992-93.

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much money will be spent, per capita, by the NHS Wales in the area of Pembrokeshire health authority in 1992-93.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett [holding answer 18 February 1992]: Information is not available on the anticipated geographical distribution of expenditure by Dyfed family health services authority in 1992-93, as between the areas served by the East Dyfed and Pembrokeshire health authorities. It is therefore not possible to provide figures on overall NHS expenditure per capita in East Dyfed and Pembrokeshire.

Indeed, some of the expenditure on hospital and community services within these districts will in fact relate to cross-boundary flows of patients from other parts of the country. Similarly there are cross-boundary flows of patients from East Dyfed and Pembrokeshire to other districts, and that needs to be taken into account if valid comparisons of per capita provision are to be made as between the two authorities.

On the basis of the allocations to district health authorities in 1992-93 that my right hon. Friend announced on 4 February at column 125-28, the anticipated revenue expenditure on hospital and community health services for the population resident within the boundaries of Pembrokeshire health authority in the next financial year—irrespective of where those services are provided—will be of the order of £422 per capita.

It should, however, be noted that that figure is based on the discretionary revenue funds already allocated to Pembrokeshire health authority together with an estimate of its prospective share of the additional revenue that will be made available to meet the capital financing needs of the Pembrokeshire health trust. It does not take into account expenditure on any centrally funded developments, details of which are still to be announced. Nor does it take account of the supplementary funding that is to be provided in respect of the recently announced pay increases for doctors, nurses and professions allied to medicine.

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much money will be spent, per capita, by the NHS Wales in the area of East Dyfed health authority in 1992-93.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett [holding answer 18 February 1992]: Information is not available on the anticipated geographical distribution of expenditure by the Dyfed family health services authority in 1992-93 as between the areas served by the East Dyfed and Pembrokeshire health authorities. It is therefore not possible to provide figures on overall NHS expenditure per capita in East Dyfed and Pembrokeshire.

Indeed, some of the expenditure on hospital and community services within these districts will in fact relate to cross-boundary flows of patients from other parts of the county. Similarly there are cross-boundary flows of patients from East Dyfed and Pembrokeshire to other districts and that needs to be taken into account if valid comparisons of per capita provision are to be made as between the two authorities.

On the basis of the allocations to district health authorities in 1992-93 that my right hon. Friend announced on 4 February, at columns 125-28, the anticipated revenue expenditure on hospital and community health services for the population resident within the boundaries of East Dyfed health authority in the next financial year—irrespective of where those services are provided—will be of the order of £449 per capita.

It should, however, be noted that that estimate is based on the discretionary revenue funds already allocated to the East Dyfed health authority. It does not take into account expenditure on any centrally funded developments, details of which are still to be announced. Nor does it take account of the supplementary funding that is to be provided in respect of the recently announced pay increases for doctors, nurses and professions allied to medicine.

Discretionary minor capital provision has been excluded because that has been allocated pro rata to the anticipated income (from all resources) of district managed units in Wales—ie, it has been allocated on a catchment rather than a resident population basis—and East Dyfed's share therefore takes account of cross-boundary flows from other authorities. Similar considerations will apply to major capital provision, details of which will be announced soon.

SCOTLAND

Disabled Workers

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what initiatives are in place within the Scottish Office to encourage the employment of people with disabilities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: The Scottish Office takes a wide range of initiatives to encourage the employment of people with disabilities, which include the following. Disablement resettlement officers receive prior notification of recruitment campaigns to help them encourage disabled people to apply. All advertisements and application forms indicate clearly that the Scottish Office is an equal opportunities employer, and also carry the Employment Department's disability symbol. Educational qualification requirements for entry to certain grades are relaxed for disabled people. On appointment staff with disabilities are assessed to establish what special assistance may be required.

The Scottish Office is fully committed to encouraging and supporting the employment of people with disabilities.

Sir Nicholas Fairbairn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what funds have been spent on buildings in Scotland by Scottish Office Departments and the Scottish Courts Administration; and if he will give details of the expenditure on each building or work in each of the past five years.

Mr. Lang: Information in the form requested is not readily available.

Buildings-related expenditure borne on the Scottish Office Administration vote (class XV, vote 20) in each of the last five years is:

£ million

[1] 'Buildings-related running costs' includes, for example, rent and rates, minor repairs and maintenance and fuel and utilities.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of the work force of the Scottish health service were disabled in each year since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The percentage of registered disabled people employed by the NHS in Scotland in each year since 1979 is set out below. Health boards and the Common Services Agency are expected, like other employers, to comply with the provisions of the Disabled Persons (Employment) Acts.

Foresterhills Hospital Trust

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proportion of capital allowed to be borrowed by the proposed Foresterhills hospital trust will be provided by way of public dividend capital.

Mr. Lang: Foresterhill trust has been allocated an external financing limit (EFL) of £105,000; this will enable the trust to invest £9·234 million in capital programmes.

The loan which relates to the EFL will be made available to the trust as interest bearing debt. However, in line with the majority of trusts in England the originating capital debt of Foresterhill will be divided 50:50 public dividend capital (PDC)/interest-bearing debt (IDB).

SOCIAL SECURITY

Benefit System

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what changes have been made to the benefit system since 1979 to encourage those on benefit to enter education while still looking for work.

Miss Widdecombe: In 1979 the concession—known as the 21-hour rule—which enabled unemployed people under 21 years of age to receive supplementary benefit while studying part-time was extended to those over 21 who had been unemployed for a year or more. In 1982, the qualifying period of unemployment was reduced from 12 to three months and periods of participation in the youth training scheme became eligible to be counted towards entitlement to supplementary benefit under this rule. These changes were carried through to the income support scheme which replaced supplementary benefit in 1988.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many (a) pensioner households, (b) families with children and (c) other households, who are tenants of (i) local authorities and new towns, (ii) housing associations and (iii) other landlords, are estimated to be receiving (1) maximum housing benefit with no deductions for non-dependants, (2) maximum housing benefit but with deductions for non-dependants and (3) a lesser amount of housing benefit towards their rent payments (x) currently and (y) since May 1989 in Great Britain as a whole and in each region for which figures are available; and what proportion of the total number of tenants in each category they represent.

Miss Widdecombe: The available estimates for May 1989 are set out in the table. I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Hammersmith (Mr. Soley) on 3 February at column 96 for the May 1990 estimates.

Housing benefit—Great Britain (Rent rebates and allowances)

	(i) LA tenants			(ii) & (iii) Private and Housing Association tenants
	(a) Pensioner	(b) Family	(c) Other	(a) Pensioner	(b) Family	(c) Other
Premium:
1. Maximum benefit	752,000	565,000	406,000	221,00	110,000	253,000
2. Maximum with Non-dependant deduction	104,000	31,000	67,000	15,000	5,000	8,000
3. Other Lesser amount	819,000	72,000	143,000	178,000	11,000	152,000

56 per cent. of local authority tenants receive Housing Benefit, of which 32 per cent. are pensioners, 13 per cent. are families and 12 per cent other.

42 per cent. of private and housing association tenants receive Housing Benefit, of which 18 per cent. are pensioners, 5 per cent. families and 18 per cent other.

Notes:

(i) Estimates of regional figures are unreliable.

(ii) May 1991 and current information is not available.

(iii) Rate rebate cases are excluded.

Source: Housing Benefit Management Information System.

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether optional tenant improvements added to local authority or housing association rents in Scotland qualify for assessment in eligibility for housing benefit.

Miss Widdecombe: Housing benefit is intended to meet reasonable accommodation costs. Broadly this means rent and any compulsory service charges which are clearly related to the provision of adequate accommodation. A rent increase may be met by housing benefit if local authorities, which have statutory responsibility for administering the scheme, consider the increase is reasonable. In deciding whether a rent increase is reasonable, authorities are expected to have regard to the nature and extent of any improvements made to the dwelling.

Industrial Deafness

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he has any plans to change the rule whereby claimants for industrial deafness benefit have to prove that over a 10-year-period they were employed in occupations involving continuous noise.

Mr. Scott: Advice to the Department on occupational deafness is provided by the Industrial Injuries Advisory Council. The council has not recommended a change in the rule regarding 10 years' work in a prescribed occupation and we have no plans for such a change.

Actuarial Certificates

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list for each year since the regulation came into force the number of actuarial certificates issued detailing the transfer of assets from one pension fund to another.

Miss Widdecombe: Regulation 12 of the Occupational Pension Schemes (Preservation of Benefit) Regulations 1991 provides for an actuarial certificate to be given on the transfer of a group of members from one occupational pension scheme to another without their consent. This certificate is to the effect that the members concerned will be no worse off as a result of the transfer and does not detail the transfer of assets.

There is no requirement to notify the Department when such a certificate is given.

Local Offices

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what arrangements he has in place to relocate staff temporarily when the Paisley office is closed for development; and if he will make a statement;

(2) when he expects works to start on the Paisley Piazza site; when he expects these works to be completed; and what arrangements he has in place to ensure the efficient operation of services at the Paisley office of his Department during the intervening period.

Miss Widdecombe: The operation of local Benefits Agency offices is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will publish a table showing the number of staff located at the Johnstone office in each year since 1980; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many staff from the Johnstone office (a) have been transferred to the Paisley office since 1989 and (b) will be transferred to the Paisley office this year; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: The staffing of district offices is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if the Johnstone office of his Department is Crown property;

(2) if the Paisley office of his Department is Crown property.

Miss Widdecombe: The accommodation occupied by Benefits Agency offices is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what is his strategy for the development of services provided from (a) the Paisley office and (b) the Johnstone office; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he has any plans to run down, close or recategorise the Johnstone office of his Department.

Miss Widdecombe: The planning of services offered by social security offices is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Disability

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what the arrangements will be to notify people with terminal illnesses of the results of their applications for disability living allowance; whether this notification will indicate that the reason for qualification is linked to their terminal illness; if he will accept requests to notify carers rather than applicants; if he will publish the wording of notifications to both applicants and carers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: People awarded disability living allowance (DLA) on the ground that they are terminally ill will be sent notification of this decision. The award notice will tell the customer that they have been awarded the higher rate of DLA for help with personal care; it will make no mention of terminal illness. This notification will be accompanied by an information sheet explaining the criteria for awards of benefit at the available rates and rights of appeal where a person is unhappy with the decision on their claim.

Under special provisions, a third party may make a claim on behalf of a terminally ill person but the law still requires that the notification of the decision should be sent to the person on whose behalf the claim has been made, except where a third party has been appointed to act on behalf of a customer who is unable to handle their own affairs. Again, the notification to the customer makes no mention of terminal illness.

I will send the hon. Member a sample notification and information sheet shortly.

Centralisation

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what instructions he has issued to district managers of the Benefits Agency regarding the centralisation of services and the development of caller offices.

Miss Widdecombe: The provision of services in Benefits Agency district offices is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Benefit Fraud

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many social security claimants have been prosecuted and found guilty of claiming benefit while working and receiving wages in (a) Blyth Valley and (b) the north-east in the last two years.

Mr. Jack: I understand from Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency, that the information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Expenditure

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much (a) disablement benefit, (b) death grant, (c) injury benefit and (d) family credit is spent per head of population in (i) the United Kingdom and (ii) Wales.

Mr. Scott: The information is not available in the form requested.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much sickness and invalidity benefit is paid out per head in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) Wales.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is not available.

Disability

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of his Department's work force have disabilities; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: As at 1 June 1991, 1·87 per cent. of the staff employed by the Department of Social Security and its executive agencies were registered as disabled. There is no information on staff with disabilities who choose not to register.

Tax Rates

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the top marginal tax rate possible (a) for a person in work paying income tax and (b) for a person at work on family credit and in receipt of housing benefit and community charge benefit.

Mr. Jack: The same tax regime is applicable to all those liable to pay income tax, irrespective of whether they are also eligible for benefits. For those receiving in-work income-related benefits, however, the highest likely marginal tax rate would be 25 per cent. The current top marginal tax rate for any payer is 40 per cent. compared with 83 per cent. in 1979.

North Yorkshire

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the expenditure and achievements of his Department in north Yorkshire during 1991; and what was the comparable position between June 1979 and May 1980.

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 11 February 1992]: Pursuant to my reply of 11 February, the information on expenditure in north Yorkshire is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, since 1979 the Government have increased total spending on social security in Great Britain by 40 per cent. in real terms and has focused extra help on low income working families, less well off pensioners and disabled people. We have virtually eliminated the unemployment trap and we have got rid of the worst elements of the poverty trap. People in north Yorkshire will have benefited from all these improvements.

The creation of the benefits and contributions agencies in April 1991 has provided the opportunity for further improving efficiency and quality in the administration of social security business. In particular, the agencies have focused on improving service to the public and have issued their own customer charters. Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency, and Miss Ann Chant, the chief executive of the Contributions Agency, will write to my hon. Friend about their agencies' achievements in north Yorkshire. Copies of the letters will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Lenient Sentences

Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Attorney-General how many referrals under the Criminal Justice Act 1988 have been made on the basis of alleged lenient sentences.

The Attorney-General: Since February 1989, when this part of the Criminal Justice Act came into force, I have sought the leave of the Court of Appeal to refer 69 cases, including five from Northern Ireland, in which the sentence passed appeared to me to be unduly lenient. Of these, in 36 cases the sentence was increased, seven cases were withdrawn by me, in a further 10 cases the sentence was not changed, in one case the sentence was lowered, and 15 cases remain outstanding.

Land Registry

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Attorney-General if he will publish the number of applications for registration of title for land currently being dealt with by the Swansea district land registry; and if he will separately distinguish the number of those applications that have already been at the district registry in Swansea for (a) up to three months, (b) between three and six months, (c) between six and nine months, (d) between nine months and one year, (e) between one year and 15 months and (f) over 15 months.

The Attorney-General: The Swansea district land registry processes more than 58,600 applications a quarter for registration of title and currently it is holding 47,879 applications of which more than 15,000 are awaiting the results of surveys or replies to correspondence raised by the registry with applicants.

The numbers within the categories of the question are as follows:

(a) Up to three months, 25,287.
(b) Between three and six months: 9,446
(c) Between six and nine months: 4,461.
(d) Between nine months and one year: 2,507.
(d) Between one year and 15 months: 1,638.
(f) Over 15 months: 4,540.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Attorney-General if he wil abolish the facility to pay an extra charge for faster registration of title to land at district land registry offices.

The Attorney-General: No. The facility referred to is a very long-standing element of the Land Registry's service to applicants. In the great majority of cases application for the registration of dealings in land are completed under the normal arrangements well before the applicant resells or otherwise deals with the land again. However, the special expedition service is needed to allow applications to be expedited in a relatively small number of cases of urgency, where the normal registration process might otherwise give rise to unacceptable delays in the conveyancing process. The fee for the special expedition service, currently a minimum of £35, is described by the Land Registration Fees Order 1991 and is required to offset the additional cost to the Land Registry of providing the service.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Environment Treaties

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those treaties to which the United Kingdom is a signatory which are concerned with protection of the environment giving, where appropriate, dates of signature, ratification, accession and entry into force.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The information requested is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. The Foreign and Commonwealth Office treaty index contains details of 12,000 treaties, agreements and protocols, many of which have environmental implications. The United Nations environment programme has 152 major treaties and other agreements recorded as being directly concerned with the environment.

Qaiser Khan

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 11 February, Official Report, column 446, what further document was requested by the British high commission when Qaiser Khan was interviewed in Islamabad.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The further document requested by the British high commission at Islamabad when the family were interviewed on 22 February 1990 was the marriage certificate of the parents of Qaiser Khan. This is still awaited.

Mr. Salman Rushdie

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met the Iranian ambassador or a representative of the Iranian Government to discuss the case of Mr. Salman Rushdie.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have raised the plight of Mr. Rushdie with the Iranian Government on many occasions and will continue to do so. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs discussed the matter with the Iranian Foreign Minister when they met in the margins of the United Nations General Assembly in September 1991. More recently, my hon. and learned Friend, the Minister of State made clear our continued concern during a call made by the Iranian chargé, at his own request.

India

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's Government has made to the Government of India following the publication of the report by the Indian Ministry of External Affairs supporting India's right to retain nuclear weapons capability.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We are unaware of the publication of any such report by the Indian Ministry of External Affairs. However, the Indian Government are in no doubt about the importance we attach to nuclear non-proliferation. We take every opportunity to raise these issues with the Indians and encourage them to accede to the NPT, most recently when my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs visited India in January.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 17 February, if he has raised the reports of breaches of the arms embargo in (a) Serbia and (b) Croatia with his European Community partners; and what action he is taking to ensure such breaches do not take place.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Reports of violations of the arms embargo are discussed in the United Nations. When possible, we have also raised the most disquieting reports bilaterally with the authorities of the country in which they are alleged to have occurred.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, upon what principles he will base his policy towards Bosnia-Herzegovina after its proposed referendum on 28 February.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The policy will be based on the guidelines adopted by EC Ministers on 16 December 1991 and the circumstances prevailing after the referendum. The guidelines require that the state to be recognised should respect the United Nations charter; guarantee the rights of minorities; respect the inviolability of frontiers except by peaceful agreement; accept commitments on disarmament, non-proliferation, security and regional stability; and promise to settle by agreement questions of state succession and regional disputes.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, what discussions he has had with his European Community partners about the implications for peace in Yugoslavia and in Europe generally of the decision to hold a referendum on independence by Bosnia-Herzegovina and on how this might affect the deployment of British personnel within a United Nations peace-keeping force.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We and our European partners are in regular contact about all aspects of Yugoslavia. These issues including the question of the referendum in Bosnia-Herzegovina were discussed most recently at a meeting of European Community Foreign Ministers on 17 February.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 17 February, who is currently responsible for the protection of Slovenian and Croatian citizens visiting or residing in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In the absence of diplomatic or consular representation, neither the Slovenian nor the Croatian Government have appointed any third government to protect their interests in the United Kingdom.

United Nations

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to publish in each week a record of decisions taken at the United Nations General Assembly and its constituent committees, together with an estimate of the cost to the United Kingdom of implementing such decisions that involve United Kingdom financial commitments.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Resolutions of the United Nations General Assembly and its constituent committees are published as United Nations documents. Copies are placed in the Library of the House as a matter of course. The budgetary implications of each UNGA resolution are also published in UN documents. We are arranging to have these too placed in the Library as a matter of course. The United Kingdom bears 5·02 per cent. of the costs of all activities financed from the regular UN budget.

TRANSPORT

Traffic Junctions (Pedestrians)

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he intends to make a statement on his Department's trials into new pedestrian facilties at traffic-signalled junctions including the use of infra-red devices to detect the presence and movement of pedestrians.

Mr. Chope: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given on Friday 14 February 1992, at column 672.

Severn Bridge

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he proposes to review the discount scheme for tolls on the Severn bridge.

Mr. Chope: Following the introduction of the tolling arrangements provided for in the Severn Bridges Act 1992, the discounts for advance payment of tolls will remain at the current rates of 20 per cent. for cars, motor caravans, light vans and minibuses, and 10 per cent. for buses and goods vehicles. The detailed administration of the discount scheme will be a matter for the concessionaire.

Road Planning

Mr. Mudd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list those public local inquiries into trunk road schemes for which no ministerial decision has yet been announced, with the concluding date for each of those inquiries and, where appropriate, the date on which the inspector's report and recommendations were submitted to the Secretary of State.

Mr. Chope: The following schemes in the national roads programme for England are awaiting a decision following a public inquiry.

Carbon Dioxide Emissions

Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action he proposes to take in order to counter the increased level of carbon dioxide emissions from catalyst equipped motor vehicles.

Mr. Chope: Catalyst equipped vehicles are unlikely to be able to achieve the same levels of fuel economy and, hence, carbon dioxide emissions as the same vehicles without catalysts. The fitment of catalysts does, however, provide a reduction of approximately 90 per cent. in emissions of carbon monoxide, hydrocarbons and oxides of nitrogen.

Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to reduce the level of carbon dioxide emissions from road transport.

Mr. Chope: The Government are committed to reducing carbon dioxide emissions from road transport as part of the target of stabilising these emissions at 1990 levels by 2005. We have been considering, with the motor industry, the various ways in which fuel efficiency, and hence carbon dioxide emissions, might be improved by better vehicle design for all types of vehicle. The Government are considering how best to provide the necessary stimulus to improve fuel efficiency, whether through fiscal measures or regulation. At the European level, the Government are pressing the European Commission to propose a directive to control carbon dioxide emissions from the whole European car fleet using a system of tradeable credits as an alternative to direct regulation. This system is designed to improve fuel efficiency and carbon dioxide reduction, whilst allowing manufacturers the maximum flexibility to choose the technology that will best suit their individual commercial constraints.

London Transport

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 12 February, Official Report, column 508, if he will indicate the fees, benefits in kind and receipts other than salary paid to (a) the chairman and (b) board members of London Transport for (1) 1990-91 and (2) 1991-92.

Mr. Freeman: The total emoluments received in 1990-91 by the Chairman and Members of the Board, including salaries, fees, pensions and other benefits, are shown in London Transport's annual report for that year. A copy of the report has been placed in the House Library. The corresponding figures for 1991-92 will appear in that year's annual report which will be published later this year.

Speed Limit Signs, Rutland

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport upon what date it was reported to his regional office in Nottingham that official 50 mph signs had been erected in the village of South Luffenham, Rutland; why they have since been removed; what has been the cost to public funds; and whether he will order a departmental inquiry into the procedures involved in erecting speed limits.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 18 February 1992]: My Department was not aware that 50 mph speed limit signs had been erected and subsequently removed; nor is it aware of the costs incurred. The A6121, which runs through South Luffenham is a local road and, as such, is not the responsibility of my Department. The Secretary of State's involvement is confined to giving consent to any speed limit promoted by the local highway authority, Leicestershire county council. No consent has been granted in this case.

The system for implementing speed limits is clearly laid down and I do not consider that an inquiry into the procedures involved in erecting speed limit signs is necessary.

Ham Street Bypass

Mr. Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to publish the results of the public inquiry into the proposed Ham Street bypass in the county of Kent.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 13 February 1992]: The Secretary of State expects to publish the inspector's report of the public inquiries into the proposed Ham Street bypass by mid-March.

ENVIRONMENT

Standard Spending Assessments

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will revise the standard spending assessment formula in accordance with representations received from county councils;

(2) if he will re-examine his financial provision for Warwickshire in response to the county council's representations about its standard spending assessment.

Mr. Portillo: In each of the last two years changes to the SSA formulae have been made in response to representations from the local authority associations, including the Association of County Councils.

The calculation of standard spending assessments for 1992-93, as set out in the Revenue Support Grant Distribution (Amendment) (No. 2) Report (England), was approved by the House on 4 February. All representations from individual local authorities including those made by Warwickshire were carefully considered prior to this.

Leigh Barton

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 31 January, Official Report, column 226-27, about the historic monument Leigh Barton, near Kingsbridge in Devon; how many days Leigh Barton has been open to the public since English Heritage took over its guardianship in 1984; what is the admission charged to the public; how many members of the public have been admitted in each of the last three years; and what is the estimated cost of maintenance and repair to complete the project.

Mr. Yeo: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave on 11 February, Official Report, column 429. Two supervised group visits, for which no charge was made, have taken place in the last three years; no requests for such visits have been refused. The cost of completing repairs at the property is estimated at £250,000.

Housing Revenue Account

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table describing the apportionment of housing revenue account subsidy between (a) rent rebate subsidy and (b) general housing subsidy on an outturn and estimated outturn basis for financial years 1990-91, 1991-92, 1992-93 and 1994-95, stating the assumptions employed to produce such figures; and if he will publish a table showing a similar apportionment, if the total cost of rent rebates was met by rent rebate subsidy.

Mr. Yeo: The information requested is shown in the table. The actual figures for 1993-94 and 1994-95 will depend on annual determinations of subsidy yet to be made. The table assumes that guideline rents and management and maintenance allowances for those years will be increased in line with inflation.

Water Capital Projects, Cleveland

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the cost of capital renewal to the water supply and sewage currently under way in Cleveland.

Mr. Baldry: This is a matter for Northumbrian Water, but I understand that in the year to 31 March 1992 capital investment in the Teesside area, which includes Cleveland, is expected to total £18·2 million. A further £1 million is being spent on other sewerage schemes by third parties —for example, Teesside development corporation—under Northumbrian Water supervision.

Bird Pests

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the introduction of a general licensing system to control the shooting of bird pest species will be delayed until the European Parliamentary Environmental Group and the European Commission have decided whether or how the European birds directive is to be changed.

Mr. Baldry: Should such a system be introduced, it would take full account of any changes that may be made to the EC birds directive, and the need to maintain arrangements for sensible and practicable control of pest bird species where necessary.

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what work his Department is carrying out on preparing for the introduction of a closed season for bird pest species; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: There are no proposals for introducing a closed season for pest bird species.

City Challenge

Mr. Cabom: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the general rules that should be adhered to by the bidders for city challenge; what is the procedure for awarding city challenge; and how much Government money is available for bids for this year's city challenge.

Mr. Key: The general rules and procedure relating to city challenge bids and information about available resources are contained in the documents "City Challenge Bidding Guidance 1993-94" and "City Challenge Financial Guidance Note No. 1" revision No. 2, copies of which have been placed in the Library of the House.

Mortgage Repossessions

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a further statement on his discussions with mortgage lenders and insurance companies on mortgage repossessions; and when he intends to introduce a scheme.

Mr. Yeo: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced on 19 December that agreement had been reached with mortgage lenders on a package of measures. The package included pledges by lenders of £750 million for rescue schemes to help borrowers in difficulty, with the expectation that up to £1 billion would be available if necessary.

Lenders are now coming forward with details of schemes. Six lenders have so far announced schemes—Halifax building society, Nationwide building society, Leeds Permanent building society, Bradford and Bingley building society, National Westminster Home Loans and the Mortgage Corporation. Others are expected to follow soon. Lenders are also introducing improved counselling arrangements for borrowers and have given a commitment that no action will be taken to repossess properties while borrowers are making significant regular payments.

The Chancellor also announced that the Government would introduce legislation for the temporary suspension of stamp duty on transactions up to £250,000 and for the direct payment to lenders of sums allowed for mortgage interest in income support. Both these measures have now passed their Commons stages.

The combined effect of these measures is expected significantly to reduce the number of repossessions this year.

Carbon Dioxide Emissions

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what effect Her Majesty's Government current policy on stabilising carbon dioxide emissions is forecast to have on the concentration levels of carbon dioxide in the atmoshere.

Mr. Baldry: The stabilisation of emissions of carbon dioxide, if applied globally, will slow the rate of increase of carbon dioxide concentrations in the atmosphere. The impact of the United Kingdom acting alone would be negligible. We therefore strongly support concerted international action to control carbon dioxide emissions.

Holcombe Moor

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the results of his Department's inquiry concerning Holcombe moor; and if he will make a statement on the proposed future use of the land in question.

Sir George Young: The inspector's report of the inquiry was made available to interested parties on 16 July 1991, along with details of the new condition proposed by the Ministry of Defence for limiting its use of the land for training. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State hopes shortly to be able to say how he proposes to take matters forward.

Local Authority Debt

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to the total level of local authority debt; from which sources the greatest proportions are borrowed; and what percentages mature in the short, medium and long term.

Mr. Key: Local authority loan debt, ie debt incurred for capital purposes, in England at 31 March 1990 is estimated at £49 billion. This figure includes both internal and external debt.

The chief sources of borrowing were the Public Works Loan Board—75 per cent.—and internal reserves and balances—20 per cent. Of the external debt, some 5 per cent was due to be repaid within one year, 20 per cent. in over one year but within five years, and 75 per cent. in over five years.

Building Maintenance, Camden

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he will take in response to the failure of the London borough of Camden to make the statutory rate of return on its building maintenance work in 1989-90.

Mr. Key: My right hon. Friend has given careful consideration to the response which the London borough of Camden has made to the notice served on the authority on 1 July 1991, and has today given a direction under section 19B of the Local Government Planning and Land Act 1980 in respect of building maintenance work. The effect of this direction is to preclude the council from assigning housing repair and mintenance work in three of the five districts of the borough to its direct labour organisation without the express consent of the Secretary of State.

Royal Parks

Sir Philip Goodhart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the review of the royal parks.

Sir George Young: I am pleased to welcome today the publication of the report of the royal parks review group.

The review group's report is a key part of our strategy aimed at fundamental changes and improvements in the royal parks and how we run them. We are aiming for excellence in the way the parks are kept, quality in what the parks offer and better management and value for money.

We are grateful to Dame Jennifer Jenkins and her team for their efforts and their expertise. They have produced a stimulating report of interesting proposals.

The group's proposals will be discussed by local amenity groups, professionals and everyday park users at a conference on 5 March. We will produce a full response to the report once we have heard what they have to say.

Copies of the report have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Humming Birds

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from the Joint Nature Conservation Committee regarding the transportation of humming birds and other nectar-feeding birds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 12 November 1991]: The Joint Nature Conservation Committee has not made any representations about the transportation of these birds. It has, however, advised that some of these species are difficult to keep in captivity. The committee is consulted about all individual applications to import these birds and and their sensitivity is taken into account in determining the applications.

Bird Pests

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether his Department will be considering the national shooting and farming organisations before introducing a licensing system to control the shooting of bird pest species.

Mr. Baldry: Should any such licensing system be introduced, my right hon. Friend would be required to make an order to amend schedule 2 to the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981. Before making such an order, he would be required by the Act to give any local authority, or any other person affected, an opportunity to submit objections or representations.

EMPLOYMENT

Dignity at Work

Mr. Norris: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he intends to accept the recommendation of the European Commission on the protection of the dignity of women and men at work of 27 November 1991.

Mr. Jackson: By means of the Council declaration of 19 December 1991 the United Kindom Government endorse the general objective of the Commission recommendation.

Migrant Workers Convention

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what consideration Her Majesty's Government have given to acceding to the European convention on the legal status of migrant workers;

(2) what consideration Her Majesty's Government have given to acceding to the international convention on the protection of the rights of all migrant workers and their families.

Mr. Forth: We have considered both conventions carefully, but we are unable to sign either. The conventions go beyond this country's existing international commitments on access to labour markets and what is necessary to secure the interests of migrants working here, who already enjoy the protection of the same laws and regulations as British workers.

Population Statistics, Devon

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the areas and sub-areas which compose the travel to work area of Barnstaple/Ilfracombe and South Molton, together with the number of adults and of young people included in each of them.

Mr. Jackson: Barnstaple/Ilfracombe travel-to-work area—TTWA—consists of ward numbers 1 to 11 and 13 to 22 in North Devon local authority district—LAD. South Moulton TWA consists of ward numbers 24 to 29 in North Devon LAD, Taw Vale ward in Mid Devon LAD and Exmoor ward in West Somerset LAD.

The latest data on age distribution of residents for wards are available from the 1981 census of population and can be obtained from the NOMIS database in the Library. Similar data from the 1991 census of population should be available towards the latter half of 1992.

PRIME MINISTER

Hackney (Government Achievements)

Mr. Norris: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the achievements of Her Majesty's Government in Hackney since 1979.

The Prime Minister: The information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Teignbridge (Mr. Nicholls) on 16 December at columns 22-25.

European Assemblies

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg: To ask the Prime Minister if he will place in the Library a copy of the information bulletin on the activities of the United Kingdom delegation to the parliamentary assemblies of the Council of Europe and the assembly of the Western European Union, which has been sent to him.

The Prime Minister: I have done so today.

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for 20 February.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

Planning Seminars

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Prime Minister if he will give the date and location of his national seminar with planners, conservationists and farmers; if he will list the organisations, both government and non-government, which are to be invited to attend; if he will also give the same information for each of the local seminars being organised around the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 19 February 1992]: A national conference "The Countryside and the Rural Economy" is being held to promote the role of the planning system in balancing the needs to diversify the rural economy and to conserve and enhance the rural environment. It is being organised jointly by the Department of the Environment and Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and will be held on 16 March at the Royal Agricultural Society of England.

More than 200 invitations have been sent to individual farmers and planners, representatives of conservation, farming, planning and other organisations with an interest in rural development, planning consultants and academics. DoE and MAFF propose to follow up this conference with a series of regional seminars, inviting people and organisations with a similar range of interests and concentrating on issues of particular concern in each area.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

European Community Grant Aid

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the effect £15·2 million of grant aid to the successful applicants under European Community Regulation 866/90 will have upon the relative competitive position of companies whose projects will not be supported.

Mr. Curry: This is an EC-funded scheme and the question facing the Government was whether to allow some United Kingdom applicants to benefit or whether to allow all the money to be spent on helping their competitors in other member states. Given the impact of the internal market in 1993 the effect on unsuccessful companies of United Kingdom participation is likely to be minimal, but the overall effect of United Kingdom participation on the competitiveness of the United Kingdom industry will be to show a significant benefit. All companies submitting projects are told clearly that they have no guarantee of success given the limited resources available.

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the total estimated expenditure of all applications under European Community Regulation 866/90 (a) received by the MAFF and (b) recommended by the MAFF to Brussels for the latest round of grant awards.

Mr. Curry: The total amount of grant aid sought in applications submitted to MAFF in respect of projects in England for the latest round of awards under EC regulation 866/90 was £27·3 million. Of these, projects seeking a total of £6·8 million in grant were recommended to the Commission.

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many applications under European Community Regulation 866/90 were received by his Department; and how many were subsequently recommended to Brussels for the latest round of awards.

Mr. Curry: The total number of eligible applications for grant received by MAFF for projects in England for the latest round of awards under EC regulation 866/90 was 93. Of these, 20 were recommended to the EC Commission.

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the extent to which FEOGA grants militate against the creation of a level playing field for fair trade in food within the EC.

Mr. Curry: European Agricultural Guidance and Guarantee Fund grants are paid in all EC countries, and are made according to clearly defined social and economic criteria.

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what criteria were applied in assessing United Kingdom applications for grant aid in the latest round of awards under EC regulations 866/90.

Mr. Curry: In order to decide which projects to put forward to Brussels under this scheme we have to apply a range of criteria derived from the appropriate EC legislation, in particular EC regulation 866/90 and Commission decision 90/342/EEC. All projects must demonstrate direct benefits to primary producers and special priority is given to projects which improve marketing structures, assist the marketing of high value products, involve substantial technological innovation, reduce the seasonality of supply or cut the costs of prepared products, the recycling of waste or use of organic produce.

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many applications were received in each of the Community countries for grant in the latest round of awards under EC regulations 866/90; how many were successful in each country and what was the value of awards in each member country.

Mr. Curry: The information we have through our involvement in the European Commission's management committee under which this grant scheme is administered is shown in the table.

Member state	Successful projects	Total value of awards mecu	£ million approx.
United Kingdom	53	21·7	15·1

Grant Aid

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on what basis it is decided to grant aid to industries which have structural problems due to over capacity.

Mr. Curry: Our overall approach has been to target sectors where there is a need for new investment. This would generally be as a result of market opportunities, but can also arise where there is a need for modernisation to improve the technical efficiency of the United Kingdom industry to enable it to compete with that in other member states.

European Community Intervention Stores

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the location of European Community intervention stores within the United Kingdom and in each case which products they contain.

Mr. Gummer: Since the question concerns matters which are the direct responsibility of the chief executive of the Intervention Board executive agency, I am asking him to write directly to the hon. Member.

Pennines Environmentally Sensitive Area

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about the further changes he intends to make to the North Pennines environmentally sensitive area.

Mr. Gummer: In drawing up the Pennine Dales environmentally sensitive area scheme, which I announced on 15 January, I consulted farmers, conservationists and other bodies. I have continued to work closely with local interests, and as a result, I have concluded that further changes are needed. I will announce the details as soon as possible.

THE ARTS

Lending

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Minister for the Arts what was the total amount paid from public funds since 1980 to lenders of works of art and heritage objects to museums, galleries, libraries and public exhibitions in respect of claims satisfied under the indemnification powers given in section 16 of the National Heritage Act 1980; and if he will list the amounts paid in each year since 1980.

Mr. Renton: Central records have been maintained only since 1985. The total amount paid under the Government indemnity scheme from then to the present time is £149,000. The amounts paid in each year are as follows:

1986-87	0
1987-88	78,000
1989-90	10,000
1990-91	61,000

There have been no payments this financial year.

WALES

Sports Council for Wales

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the current level of funding to the Sports Council for Wales; what proportion it represents of total Welsh Office expenditure; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Grant-in-aid to the Sports Council for Wales for the current financial year is £5·2 million. This represents just under 0·1 per cent. of the forecast outturn—£5,286 million—for total Welsh Office expenditure as published in Cm. 1916.

Welsh Office support is also given to other bodies in respect of specific sports-related projects under the urban programme, rural initiative and PRNI—projects of regional and national importance—and SP—special projects—schemes.

Education (Abergavenny)

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has to develop Welsh medium education in Abergavenny; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: This is a matter for Gwent county council as the responsible local education authority.

SSSIs

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many sites of special scientific interest are currently designated in Wales; what means exist to monitor loss and damage to sites of special scientific interest in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: A total of 827 sites of special scientific interest have so far been designated in Wales. The Countryside Council for Wales monitors these sites through its site integrity monitoring programme. This process involves undertaking a rolling programme of visits and collecting and examining relevant photographic evidence.

Leader Programme

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to claw back financial assistance given under the European Community's Leader programme from the moneys allocated to the Development Board for Rural Wales and the Welsh Development Agency for the forthcoming financial year.

Mr. David Hunt: The likely level of EC receipts arising from the Leader initiative was taken into account in arriving at the grant in aid settlements for the respective agencies for 1992-93.

General Practitioners

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish figures showing the average number of NHS general practitioner consultations in Wales per person, per year from 1977 to 1991 according to each age category.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Information is readily available only for the years shown in the table.:

Council Housing

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much money his Department is making available to local housing authorities in Wales to deal specifically with problems of condensation and dampness in council housing stock; what is his assessment of the extent of the problem in Wales; and what are the prospects of achieving a solution.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave him on 5 February. The results of the 1986 Welsh house condition survey indicated serious problems of dampness in 0·3 per cent. of the local authority stock.

Elderly People

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the projected number of single-person elderly households in Wales for each year from 1986 to 2001; and how many are estimated to be (a) male and (b) female.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The most recently published estimates of single person elderly households are those in table 3 of the "1989-Based Household Projections for Counties of Wales" a copy of which is in the Library of the House. Comparable figures for 1986 are not available.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many (a) private, (b) voluntary, (c) local authority and (d) long-stay national health service places were made available for elderly people in Wales in each year from 1977 onwards.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The available information concerning beds and places is given in the following table:

[1] Beds designated as elderly/long stay. Information is not available for the years 1977 to 1981. Data for 1982 to 1987 are at 31 December, for 1989 onwards they are at 31 March.
[2] Number of places at 31 March.
[3] Average daily available beds in the specialties of geriatric medicine and elderly mentally infirm/old age psychiatry, not all geriatric beds are designated as long stay. National health service beds are allocated according to the specialty of the consultant using the bed and not to the age group of the patient and, therefore, there will be beds in other specialties apart from the ones included here which at some time will be occupied by elderly patients. Data are for years ending 31 December for 1977 to 1987 and for years ending 31 March for 1989 to 1991. Due to a change in the definition of specialties, data for 1990 and 1991 are not strictly comparable with previous years.

In-patients

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will publish figures for in-patient bed days per 1,000 population in non-psychiatric hospitals in Wales in each year from 1979, broken down into age categories;

(2) how many in-patient admissions per 1,000 population into non-psychiatric hospitals have occurred in Wales in each year since 1979; and if he will publish the figures according to age category.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Information is collected on the basis of in-patient discharges, including deaths, from hospital rather than admissions to NHS hospitals in Wales.

Bed days and in-patient deaths and discharges per 1,000 population in non-psychiatric NHS hospitals in Wales, by age of patient on discharge, are given in the tables.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the six highest and the six lowest numbers of electors in parliamentary constituencies in Wales; and what is the average constituency electorate in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: The six parliamentary constituencies with the highest number of electors and the six parliamentary constituencies with the lowest number of electors in Wales at 1991 are as follows. The average electorate of a parliamentary constituency in Wales was 58,086.

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give figures for the number of people accepted by local authorities in Wales as homeless under part III of the Housing Act 1985 between January and December 1991, by district, compared with the previous year.

Kidney Patients

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many patients from within Gwent with kidney disorder are treated by dialysis at centres outside Gwent; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: This information is not collected centrally. The hon. Gentleman may wish to approach Gwent district health authority about this.

Areas of Outstanding Natural Beauty

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to announce his decision on current planning applications for golf courses in the Wye valley area of outstanding natural beauty; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Planning applications for golf courses at Porthcasseg farm, St. Arvan's Chepstow and at Croes Bleddyn farm, Itton, Chepstow were called in for my determination on 7 February. Following receipt of documents from Monmouth borough council, consideration is now being given to holding public local inquiries.

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what guidelines are issued to local authority planning departments with regard to development in areas of outstanding natural beauty.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Planning guidance on development in areas of outstanding natural beauty may be found in the following planning policy guidance—PPG—and minerals planning guidance—MPG—notes issued jointly by the Department of the Environment and the Welsh Office:

PPG7 "The Countryside and Rural Economy" (paras: 3.8-3.11);
MPG1 "General Considerations and the Development Plan System" (para: 43);
MPG2 "Applications, Permissions and Conditions" (para: 39);
MPG3 "Opencast Coal Mining" (para: 14); and MPG6 "Guidelines for Aggregates Provision in England and Wales" (para: 20).

Schools Inspectorate

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give details of all the visits made by Her Majesty's inspectors of education to schools in the Monmouth constituency since September 1990.

Sir Wyn Roberts: All secondary schools and over 70 per cent. of the primary schools in the Monmouth constituency have been visited by Her Majesty's inspectors of schools since September 1990. In secondary schools these visits have included surveys of mathematics, science and music; in primary schools they have included two full inspections and surveys of music, Welsh, history, geography, school-industry links and arrangements for teacher appraisal. The monitoring of the implementation of the national curriculum has received priority in the routine visits to schools.

Monmouth Borough Council

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what announcements he has made regarding the reduction in standard spending assessment for Monmouth borough council for 1992-93 since it was first announced; and what was the reason for the reduction.

Mr. David Hunt: The final local authority standard spending assessments were set out in the settlement reports laid before the House on 10 February and debated and approved by Parliament on 12 February. Recalculation of the provisional SSAs laid before the House on 20 January took account of the increase in resources for teachers' pay. To achieve consistency, it was also necessary to take account of other data changes. These altered the relativity of individual district authority SSAs within the overall amount of total standard spending allocated to district authorities which was unchanged.

Hydatid Disease

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what research is available to him regarding (a) the incidence and (b) the effects of hydatid disease on animals and humans in Gwent; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Information on the incidence of human hydatid disease in Gwent for the period 1974 to 1983 is contained within the published report "The Changing Incidence of Human Hydatid Disease in England and Wales" by S. R. Palmer and Ann H. B. Biffen. The communicable disease surveillance centre (Wales) is currently working on an updated survey covering the period 1984 to 1990. This survey will again include data for Gwent. The results are expected later this year.

A considerable body of research exists into the effects of hydatid disease in humans, though none specific to Gwent.

As far as farm animals are concerned hydatidosis is not a notifiable disease, and there are no official statistics available on incidence. The disease causes little discomfort in farm animals affected.

Kidney Patients

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has for a renal dialysis unit for Gwent health authority; and what is the estimated cost of such a unit.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: This is a matter for Gwent district health authority. No proposals have been made by the authority to the Welsh Office.

National Health Service Staff

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what was the number of staff graded as general or senior managers in the health service in Wales on 1 January 1986; and what was the corresponding number on 1 September 1991;

(2) what was the number of administrative and clerical staff in the health service in Wales on 1 January 1986; and what is the corresponding figure for 1 September 1991.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett [holding answer 14 February 1992]: On 31 January 1986 there were 6,805 whole-time equivalent administrative and clerical staff employed by the health service in Wales, including staff employed by district health authorities, by the Welsh Health Common Services Authority, and by certain family health services authorities which share the payroll system from which this information is derived, but excluding information for other FHSAs. The figure for 30 September 1991 was 8,733.

Of the September 1991 figure, 693 whole-time equivalents were graded as general or senior managers, including "second tranche" senior managers reporting to general managers or management board/teams. Due to changes in the grading structure of managerial staff between 1986 and 1989, a comparable figure for 1986 is not available.

Administrative and clerical staff costs as a proportion of the National Health Service pay bill in Wales have fallen from 12·2 per cent. in 1979 to 10·9 per cent. in 1991. Authorities often differ in their approach to coding jobs for record purposes. Advice is to be issued shortly to ensure that staff figures are derived on a common basis.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Income Tax

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish a table showing, by range of total income, for those (a) under and (b) over 65 years, the number of increases to the tax yield and estimated average rates of income tax payable in 1990-91, broken down by bands of £1,000s to £10,000, £2,000s to £20,000, £5,000s to £50,000 and £50,000s to £500,000, distinguishing between single persons, married and single persons qualifying for married allowance and other married persons.

Mr. Maude: The available information on average rates of tax is in the tables. Estimates of increases in tax yield could be made only by reference to an alternative tax regime.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the loss of revenue from taxation of investment income at (a) standard rate and (b) higher rates as a result of independent taxation of men and women; and how much of this loss results from the transfer of taxable assets for husbands to wives.

Mr. Maude: An estimate of the total direct revenue cost of independent taxation was given in the "Financial Statement and Budget Report 1988-89". The further analysis requested is not readily available.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will bring up to date, for 1990-91, his answer of 19 October 1988, Official Report, columns 921-24, concerning investment income, replacing the categories for married couples with and without earned income with (a) married and other persons qualifying for a married allowance and (b) married persons entitled only to a single allowance.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the level of income tax received on income from overseas for the last two years for which figures are available.

Mr. Maude: Income tax chargeable on investment income received by United Kingdom residents from overseas in the years ending 5 April 1990 and 5 April 1989 and taxed under cases IV and V of schedule D is estimated to be in the region of £170 million and £95 million respectively before allowing for double taxation relief. The amount of such relief allowed is not known.

Income tax deducted from foreign company and public revenue dividends paid by or through United Kingdom paying and collecting agents in these two years amounted to £201 million and £192 million respectively. Figures are also available for the year ending 5 April 1991 where the amount was £329 million.

Incomes

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will update his answer of 29 July 1988, Official Report, columns 724-25, concerning the distribution of incomes by range of income in excess of £20,000 a year to give the figures for 1991-92.

Mr. Maude: Estimates for 1991-92 are given in the table. The figures relate to taxpaying individuals following the introduction of independent taxation in 1990.

Mortgage Interest Relief

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will update his answer of 6 April 1987, Official Report, columns 70-72, showing the estimated amount of mortgage interest relief due to taxpayers with an income in excess of £20,000 a year, to give the figures for 1991-92; and if he will give separate particulars for those with income between £50,000 and £100,000 and in excess of £100,000.

Mr. Maude: Equivalent available information taking account of independent taxation is given in the table. The estimates are based on a projection from the 1989-90 survey of personal incomes and are therefore provisional.

European Community Budget

Mr. Gill: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the net cost of contributions to the European Community, per head of population, in each country for each of the past five years.

Mr. Maude: The European Commission does not publish information on member states' net balances in respect of the European Community budget. The latest information available is contained in the European Court of Auditors' report for 1990; this gives information on member states' gross contributions and information on some 85 per cent. of receipts, with administration and research the main elements of internal expenditure excluded. Using this incomplete information, member states' net contributions per head for the last five years for which information is available were as follows. Net recipients are shown as negative.

ecu per head

Belgium	+29	+73	+101	+113	+77
Denmark	−82	−58	−64	−34	−82

Portugal	−21	−38	−50	−63	−58
United Kingdom	+25	+46	+36	+59	+59

Note: Although the table shows Belgium, Luxembourg and Italy (except for 1987) as net contributors in each year, none is likely to have been when receipts excluded from the Court of Auditors' Report are taken into account.

European Community Contributions

Mr. Gill: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the net cost per head of population of the United Kingdom's contribution to the EC in the current financial year; and what is the projected figure for 1992-93.

Mr. Maude: The Chancellor's departmental report, Cm.1918, gives an estimated outturn for 1991-92 and forecast for 1992-93 of the United Kingdom's net contribution to the European Community budget, taking account of public sector receipts, but not those to the private sector, mainly for research. On the basis of these estimates the net cost per head of population for 1991-92 is £21 and the projection for 1992-93 is £50. The figure for 1991-92 is unusually low owing to a refund of contributions paid in earlier years and a high level of abatement.

Mr. Gill: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the net cost per head of population of Germany's contribution to the EC in the current financial year; and what is the projected figure for 1992-93.

Mr. Maude: The European Commission does not publish information on member states' net balances in respect of the European Community budget. The latest information published in Germany's contributions and receipts is contained in the 1990 Court of Auditors' report. Information on 1991 will be given in the 1991 Court of Auditors' report, due to be published next December.

Public Works Loan Board

Mr. Simon Burns (Chelmsford): To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if any changes are proposed in the quotas for lending to local authorities by the Public Works Loan Board.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Yes. The Public Works Loan Board Commissioners have issued a circular today giving local authorities advance notice of a change in the formula for calculating the quotas for 1992-93, reflecting continued concern about the level of investments held by some authorities expressed, among others, by the Treasury and Civil Service Select Committee in its recent report "Banking Supervision and BCCI: the Role of Local Authorities and Money Brokers", HC26. The modified formula will reduce the quota available to local authorities who hold substantial investments which could be used in place of fresh borrowing. It will have little or no effect on authorities where investments are small. Quota loans are made at rates close to but below market rates: local authorities will still have access to non-quota loans.

The circular also notified local authorities of two improvements to the board's facilities: the ability to make premature repayments of loans in advance of the day on which it is due will be extended to include variable rate loans, and an option given to replace a fixed rate loan before maturity by a variable rate loan.

A copy of the circular has been placed in the House Library.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will give details of the quantity and content of representations he has received concerning the change to the postponed accounting system for VAT on goods and services commencing on 1 January 1993;

(2) how many individual businesses he expects to be included in the new postponed accounting system for VAT in each of the years 1993, 1994 and 1995;

(3) what assessment he has made of the effect on the cash flow of businesses of the postponed accounting system for VAT at the end of 1992.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 14 February 1992]: No representations directly relating to the postponed accounting system have been received. Businesses have been informed of the change which has been generally welcomed because of the resulting cash flow benefits. Some representations have been received on the proposals that the larger businesses will be required to account for VAT monthly to offset the cash flow loss to the exchequer which is a consequence of the postponed accounting system.

Some 90,000 businesses will be included in the postponed accounting system and, because they will no longer need to pre-finance the payment of VAT on imports of goods and associated services from other EC countries, these businesses will make a cash flow saving equivalent to deferring payment for six weeks.

Dr. Marek: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the items listed as zero-rated for VAT in table 4B.1 of annex B to chapter 4 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report 1991-92" are safeguarded until at least December 1996.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 19 February 1992]: Yes. In the context of European Community negotiations last year on VAT rates, our right to continue to apply all our existing zero rates was confirmed. The agreement reached relates to the so-called transitional period, which, in principle, will end on 31 December 1996 subject to unanimous agreement that the conditions for moving to the definitive system have been met, but is without prejudice to the future of our zero rates thereafter.

Overseas Income

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will bring up to date the information on gross overseas income for tax purposes given in his answer of 23 March 1987, Official Report, columns 42-43.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 19 February 1992]: The latest estimate for property and entrepreneurial income from abroad, net of foreign taxes, relates to 1990 and is £81,287 million. Estimates for earlier years are given in table 10.1 of the 1991 edition of "United Kingdom National Accounts".

Income Statistics

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will bring up to date the information on investment incomes in his answer of 25 July 1986, Official Report, columns 671-72, on the basis of income ranges adjusted to take account of inflation.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 19 February 1992]: Estimates are given in the table:

Investment Income

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) whether he will publish for each of the four fiscal years ended on 5 April 1991, the estimated amount of investment income accruing to (a) non-earning and (b) earning married women;

(2) if he will publish a table in the same form as in his answer of 7 November 1988, Official Report, columns 35-36, showing for 1989-90 and 1990-91 the number of women and the amount of investment income divided between those with earned income and those without; and if he will add figures for a lower limit of £15,000, £25,000 and £100,000.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 19 February 1992]: Readily available estimates for taxpaying wives with investment income at 1990-91 levels of income are as follows.

Company Perks

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what effect the reduction in higher rates of tax has had on the giving of perks by companies; what is his estimate of the reduction in the value of such perks since 1979 as a proportion of the amount paid to those paying higher-rate tax; if he will estimate the taxable values in the current year of each class of benefit subject to taxation under special rules; and what estimate he has of the actual value of (a) the provision of accommodation and (b) cheap or interest free mortgages and loans for the purchase of accommodation.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 19 February 1992]: It is not possible to provide an estimate of the taxable benefits paid to higher rate taxpayers in 1978-79. The available analysis of estimates of the taxable value of benefits in kind and expenses payments in 1991-92 by type of benefit is as follows:

Type of benefit	Amount of taxable benefit (£ million)
Car	4,400
Beneficial loan	180

It is not possible to give a reliable estimate of the actual value of provided accommodation or of cheap or interest-free loans for house purchase.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Seismic Monitoring

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether Her Majesty's Government support any broadband-3 component seismic data monitoring stations in the United Kingdom for scientific research purposes.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Her Majesty's Government support two broadband-3 component seismic data monitoring stations, and partially support another, in the United Kingdom. Data from these stations are available to the scientific community for research purposes.

Pupil Numbers

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what has been the total spending on (a) primary—infant and junior—and (b) secondary schools in England each year since 1979 in cash terms and at 1979 prices; and what was the percentage change in the level of spending in real terms between each of those years.

Mr. Fallon [pursuant to his reply, 12 February, 1992, c. 525-27]: Following are revised tables showing corrected figures for spending on nursery and primary schools and secondary schools in England.

[1] Net recurrent expenditure includes total expenditure other than costs of financing capital expenditure, less income other than from specific grants.

[2] Spending on nursery and primary schools was not collected separately for years after 1986-87, so expenditure figures cover both nursery and primary schools.

[3] Expenditure figures have been repriced to 1979-80 prices using the current GDP (Market Prices) Deflator index.

Note: The figures in the tables are derived from local education authorities' returns of their spending to the Department of the Environment.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

German Shipyards

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what efforts his Department has made to ensure that German shipyards do not have an unfair advantage over British shipyards in tendering for new contracts.

Mr. Leigh: Support for all Community shipbuilders is subject to the terms of the seventh directive on aid to shipbuilding. Under the terms of the directive the European Commission sets the maximum level of support which they may receive for each contract.

P and O Line

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assistance his Department gave to British shipyards to tender for the construction of a new cruise liner for the P and O line.

Mr. Leigh: No requests for assistance were received.

Auditing Practices Board

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent discussions he has had with the Auditing Practices Board over its proposal to introduce a going concern audit test on companies.

Mr. Redwood: I met the chairman of the Auditing Practices Board recently to discuss its work programme, and he explained to me the board's current thinking on its proposals to revise the existing guidance on the auditor's considerations in respect of going concern.

Investors (Compensation)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received about the exclusion of promises to pay binding in Scots law from the investors compensation scheme; and from whom.

Mr. Redwood: The rules and operation of the investors compensation scheme are a matter for the Securities and Investments Board.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what representations he has had about the protected withdrawal of insurance cover for the investors' compensation scheme; and whom those representations were from;

(2) what representations he has received about the funding of the investors compensation scheme; and from whom.

Mr. Redwood: The funding arrangements of the investors compensation scheme are a matter for the Securities and Investments Board.

Beer (Complaints)

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many complaints he has received from members of the public in England concerning froth on beer.

Mr. Leigh: My Department has received 22 such complaints since the beginning of 1991.

Post Office (Customer Redress)

Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the Post Office's arrangements for customer redress.

Mr. Lilley: As the citizens charter White Paper indicated, I asked the Post Office, in consultation with the Post Office Users' National Council—POUNC—to draw up a report on their present arrangements for customer redress. I have now received reports from the three Post Office businesses: Royal Mail, Royal Mail Parcelforce, and Post Office Counters Limited, together with responses from POUNC in respect of all three businesses. I will place both the reports and the responses in the Library of the House today.

One of the key principles of the citizens charter concerns redress for consumers when service falls below the standards they are entitled to expect. Of course, getting it right first time is much to be preferred to compensating for service failures. But when things go wrong, it is important that the customer can be assured, first, that Post Office practice matches up to the best in the field; and secondly, that the customer knows what he or she is entitled to.

On the first of these, the reports demonstrate the continued commitment each Post Office subsidiary is making, in consultation with POUNC, to ensure that they have the right compensation and redress practices for each business. While comparisons are not always straightforward, I am satisfied that Post Office arrangements are comparable to—and in several areas, surpass—those of similar companies or institutions.

The need for increases in amounts paid in compensation must be carefully evaluated, for it would be wrong for money to be diverted from service improvement into over-generous compensation for poor services. I do recognise, however, that there is some scope for increases where they help stimulate efficiency, and I welcome, therefore, the Post Office and POUNC agreement, for example, on increased payments for added-value letter service failure to up to twice the service fee or a book of 10 first class stamps, whichever is the greater.

On the question of ensuring a well-publicised and available complaints procedure, I note the commitment by all the businesses to increase the publicity given to compensation and redress schemes. Furthermore, I understand that it is the intention of the Post Office to set out compensation entitlements in the next edition of the "Post Guide", which is to be distributed to every home in the country during the course of this year.

I am grateful to the Post Office and POUNC for all the hard work and hard thought that has been put into these reports, and encourage both organisations to continue these productive discussions—which are entirely in keeping with the spirit of the citizens charter.

Bicycles

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he will make a statement concerning the duty-free status of Chinese bicycles imported into the United Kingdom;

(2) if he will press the European Commission to change the import rules so that duty is applied retrospectively to all those imports of bicycles from China in excess of the approved import thresholds in 1991 and in 1992; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 18 February 1992]: Bicycles from China enter the United Kingdom under the European Community's generalised system of preferences —GSP—scheme which allows entry duty-free up to a threshold or ceiling of 9·45 mecu worth of bicycles. After this threshold is reached, duty may be reimposed by the Commission at the request of a member state if they are satisfied that domestic industry is being damaged by such imports. A review of the whole generalised system of preferences scheme is to be held this year. The views of the bicycle manufacturers, as of other sectors of industry, will be sought on changes which might be made to the operation of the scheme.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Terrorism

6. Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989 makes it possible to proscribe terrorist organisations such as the IRA. It also provides powers of examination, detention and exclusion, and also to counter financial assistance for terrorism. These powers are essential for the police to investigate and combat terrorism and form an essential part of the Government's counter-terrorist strategy.

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he received the report from the Viscount Colville of Culross QC on the operation in 1991 of the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I have received such a report from Viscount Colville and have placed copies on the Library.

Policing Costs (Hunts)

10. Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will issue guidelines to police forces about recovering costs of policing from fox and deer hunts along the same lines as costs recovered from football and other sporting activity.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Policing inside football grounds and at similar events is provided as a special police service, for which charges can be made under section 15 of the Police Act 1964. The guidance which has been issued on policing at football grounds includes general guidance on the principles of charging for special police services. The decision whether to provide a special police service is a matter for the chief constable concerned.

Prison Statistics

11. Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were held in prison during 1991.

Mrs. Rumbold: The average population in prison establishments in England and Wales during 1991 was 44,808.

Carl Bridgewater

14. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many representations he has received concerning the case of those convicted of the murder of Carl Bridgewater.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Since 1982, there have been some 200 representations about the safety of these convictions.

Strangeways Prison

15. Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners are now being held in police cells in Greater Manchester, Cheshire, Lancashire and elsewhere as a result of the riot at Strangeways: and what were the corresponding figures six months ago, nine months ago and one year ago.

Mrs Rumbold: There are currently 625 prisoners being held in police cells as a result of the loss of accommodation at Manchester prison. Six months ago this figure was 552, nine months ago 487 and a year ago 582.

Tobacco (Children)

16. Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the Children and Young Persons (Protection from Tobacco) Act 1991 will come into force.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Act, apart from section 4, will come into force on 1 March in England and Wales, and Scotland. Section 4, which deals with the display of warning statements in retail premises and on cigarette vending machines, will be brought into effect later in the year after separate consultations with the interested parties have been completed.

Postal Voting

17. Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will arrange for an immediate newspaper advertising campaign to outline provision for postal and proxy voting at parliamentary elections.

Mrs. Rumbold: As soon as the general election is announced, we shall run a newspaper and television advertising campaign, informing electors about their right to apply for an absent vote if they cannot get to the polling station to vote in person. We believe that such a campaign is likely to be most effective if launched once the date of the general election has been announced.

Police, Leicestershire

18. Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will approve an increase in the number of police in the Leicestershire force.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My right hon. Friend has approved 13 additional posts for Leicestershire from 1 October 1991 and a further 26 police posts with effect from 1 April 1992, subject to confirmation by the police authority that it will meet its share of the cost. These approvals will provide for a police establishment of 1,853; an increase of 148 or 8·7 per cent. since 1979.

Police, West Cumbria

19. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will visit west Cumbria to discuss matters relating to policing.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary has no plans to do so at present.

Community Service

20. Dr. Michael Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent assessment he has made of the effectiveness of community service as a sentence.

Mr. John Patten: The introduction in 1989 of monitored national standards for the operation of community service orders has successfully promoted a higher use of the orders by the courts. In 1990—the first full year of operation and the most recent for which figures are available—the number of people who began a community service order was 37,490. This was 10 per cent. more than in 1989 and without any reduction in the proportion of offenders—36 per cent.—who had previously been in custody.

Probation Service

21. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the future of the probation and after-care service.

Mr. John Patten: The planned commencement from October of the main provisions of the Criminal Justice Act 1991 will give the 55 probation services in England and Wales an even more important role, especially in preparing advice to the courts and in supervising offenders in the community.

Visas (Right of Entry)

22. Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to resist proposals for visitors to other EC countries on visas to thereby have the right to enter the United Kingdom.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: That is already my right hon. Friend's policy. The proposal for mutual recognition of visas which is contained in the draft external frontiers convention does not imply such a right.

Police, Cambridgeshire

23. Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the increase in the police manpower levels in Cambridgeshire since 1979.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: At the end of November 1991 police strength in Cambridgeshire was 1,247; an increase since 1979 of 176 officers, or 16 per cent. My right hon. Friend approved 16 new posts from 1 October 1991, six more from 28 November and a further 10 posts from 1 April this year.

Violence Against Women

24. Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps his Department has taken to help protect women against violent crime.

Mr. John Patten: Government action in recent years has been directed towards tackling rape and domestic violence. In the light of Home Office research studies, which provided fresh insight into the nature of these crimes, we have taken a number of steps. We have issued guidance to the police on how to improve their response; we have strengthened the powers of the courts to punish offenders and to protect victims; and we have encouraged local agencies to work together to provide help and support to women who are victims of violent or sexual crimes.

Police (Urban Areas)

25. Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the pressures on police in serving urban communities and the appropriate allocation of police manpower.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My right hon. Friend considers requests from police authorities for increases in police establishments with the advice of Her Majesty's inspectorate of constabulary. In formulating its advice, the inspectorate uses a manpower formula to aid assessment of the relative needs of forces, and one of the factors in that formula is the degree of urbanisation in each force area.

Lollipop People

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many lollipop people are known to be needed in Greater London; what is being done to recruit them; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that at 11 February 1992 there were 208 vacancies on a total establishment of 1,350 schools crossing patrol posts. Recruitment effort is being directed to local communities by advertising in schools, libraries and community centres.

Betting Shops (Evening Opening)

Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of representations he has received against the evening opening of betting shops has come from greyhound racing interests.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Since issuing our consultation document on the evening opening hours of licensed betting offices on 14 October, the great majority of the representations we have received against evening opening have come from the greyhound racing industry and its supporters.

Crime Statistics

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the increase in reported crime since 1979.

Mr. John Patten: The available information relates to recorded crime. Figures for 1979 to 1989 are published in table 2.2 of "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales, 1989" and figures for 1990 are published in table 3 of Home Office Statistical Bulletin 13/91. Copies of these publications are available in the Library.

The British Crime Survey provides a measure of reported crime as experienced by adults in England and Wales. The most recent available results show that there was a 30 per cent. increase in offences measured by the survey between 1981 and 1987, as against a 41 per cent. increase in comparable recorded offences.

Murderers on Parole

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number of convicted murderers on parole from Leyhill open prison in February 1988, February 1989, February 1990 and February 1991.

Mrs. Rumbold: Information on the establishment from which ex-prisoners, still subject to a life licence, were originally released is not recorded centrally.

Northern Ireland Prisoners

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what further progress has been made in relation to Northern Ireland prisoners who are serving sentences in gaols in England and Wales to serve the remaining part of their sentences in gaols in Northern Ireland.

Mrs. Rumbold: The policy and practice governing the transfer of prisoners between United Kingdom jurisdictions is being reviewed by an inter-departmental working party. We expect to receive the working party's report shortly.

Fire Service

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what was the total cost of the fire service in (a) England and Wales and (b) in the United Kingdom in 1979 and in the last year for which records are available;

(2) how many fire appliances were in service in (a) England and Wales fire brigades and (b) the United Kingdom fire brigades in 1979 and the most recent year for which figures are available;

(3) how many fire-fighting personnel were in post in fire brigades in (a) England and Wales and (b) the United Kingdom in 1979 and in the last year for which records are available.

Mr. John Patten: The information requested in relation to England and Wales is given in the table. Similar questions relating to the fire service in other parts of the United Kingdom are the responsibility of my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Northern Ireland.

	1979	1991
Total cost[1]	[2]355	[3]1,164

[3] 1991-92 estimated outturn.
[4] Expressed in real terms at 1991-92 prices using GDP deflator.
[5] Wholetime and part-time (retained) firefighters and control room staff.
[6] Pumping and special appliances.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many special service calls the fire brigades of (a) England and Wales and (b) the United Kingdom responded to in 1979 and the most recent year for which records exist.

Mr. John Patten: Fire brigades attended 85,568 special service incidents during 1979 and 190,787 during 1990 in England and Wales. Figures for the United Kingdom are 90,508 and 198,868 respectively.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department to how many call-outs to fires the fire services in England and Wales responded in (a) 1979 and (b) the most recent year for which records exist.

Mr. John Patten: Fire brigades attended 304,582 fires during 1979 and 400,904 during 1990 in England and Wales.

Mr. Habib Somai

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will make an early decision in the case of Mr. Habib Somai who first applied to remain as a spouse in this country on 22 January 1991, and whose Member of Parliament first wrote to him on 1 August 1991; and whether he will make a statement on the reasons for the time taken to deal with this application.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is about to write to the right hon. Member, conveying a decision on Mr. Somai's application. The delay in resolving this application is due, in part, to the need to obtain further information about Mr. Somai's original visa application in Tunis and to arrange an interview with Mr. Somai and his wife.

Constituencies

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the six largest geographical parliamentary constituencies in England and, in each case, show the acreage.

Mrs. Rumbold: The information is set out in the tables. The areas are given in hectares and include land and inland water. A hectare is equivalent to 2·471 acres.

Parliamentary Constituencies in England: The six largest constituencies, by geographical area

Constituency	Area in hectares
Penrith and the Border	327,964
Hexham	250,992

National Criminal Intelligence System

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department who will have access to the new integrated national criminal intelligence system; how many records the system is expected to hold; and what will be the source of the information held on the system.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The current project plan only allows national criminal intelligence service staff to input information on to the computer system. However, it is intended that police forces and regional crime squads will have terminals for inquiry purposes and that Her Majesty's Customs and Excise will be allowed restricted access.

Until the functional specification has been agreed, it is not possible to say how many records the system will hold. The intelligence will come from police forces in the United Kingdom, regional crime squads and regional drugs wings, Interpol, Her Majesty's Customs and Excise and other international enforcement agencies.

HEALTH

Social Services

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he has any plans to compensate health authorities for any additional costs incurred by the failure of local authorities to meet their obligations to clients within the health authority boundaries;

(2) what steps he takes to monitor additional costs falling upon health authorities as a consequence of industrial action by social services or other staff caring for vulnerable people in their communities;

(3) what representations he has received from health authorities affected by the withdrawal of services by social services staff in Camden; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We are not aware of any calculations of excess costs being made by health authorities in these circumstances.

The strike by social workers in Camden has disrupted social services in the borough, although statutory duties are being carried out on an emergency basis by management. The protracted nature of this dispute is clearly against the interests of the public and Camden residents. The dispute should be resolved quickly by the local authority and its work force.

Dentists, Durham

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients registered with dentists in the Durham area for each year since 1981 were (a) under 16 years, (b) between 16 and 65 years and (c) over 65 years.

Mr. Dorrell: Patients registered with dentists for the first time when the new dental contract was introduced in October 1990. The only figures available for a complete year are those for 1991. The information requested for the Durham family health services authority is as follows. All figures are for the year ending 31 December 1991.

	Number
Under 18 years	73,511
18 to 64 years	188,102
65 or more years	31,167

Source: Dental Practice Board GDS Quarterly Statistics.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many dentists in Durham have resigned from the National Health Service.

Mr. Dorrell: None.

Toxocara Canis

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish a table to show for each of the last three years his estimates of (a) the number of children in Great Britain who have been infected with toxocara canis, (b) how many of those infections are attributable to dogs, (c) how many are attributable to foxes and (d) how many are attributable to other canines; and what is his estimate of the level of infected (i) foxes and (ii) dogs in (1) urban and (2) rural areas.

Mr. Dorrell: Human Toxocariasis is caused by a variety of species in the genus toxocara. Information collected by the Public Health Laboratory Service communicable disease surveillance centre refers to infection caused by any of these parasites.

The table lists the total number of laboratory reports of infections due to Toxocara species in children for the period 1988-91. These data cover England, Wales Northern Ireland, the Republic of Ireland, Channel Islands and Isle of Man, but not Scotland.

No information is available on how many of these infections were attributable to dogs, foxes or other canines. The Public Health Laboratory Service is concerned predominantly with human infection and does not have information on the level of infection amongst urban and rural dogs and foxes.

Vapona Strips

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what advice has been issued by his Department concerning the adverse effects on some human beings of contact with Vapona strips or similar insecticides.

Mr. Dorrell: None.

All insecticides have to be approved for use under the Control of Pesticides Regulations 1986. Before approval is given advice must be sought from the statutory Advisory Committee on Pesticides.

Manufacturers are required under the regulations to state on the product what precautions should be taken by those who are likely to use or come into contact with it. Provided these precautions are taken, it would be most unlikely for any adverse effects to be experienced. We are not aware of any adverse effects being reported from the use of these particular products.

Electoral Register

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the will state (a) the estimated population of 18 years and over and (b) the number of names on the electoral register.

Mr. Dorrell: The latest estimate of the United Kingdom population aged 18 and over, relating to mid-1990, is 44·3 million. There were 43·6 million names on the 1991 electoral register—qualifying date 10 October 1990. Information about the 1992 electoral register is still being collected.

Prescription Charges

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the dates and amounts of increases in prescription charges, in pence and percentage terms, since June 1979.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The requested information is in the table. One hundred million more items are prescribed free now compared to 1979. One item in six now carries a charge. In 1979 it was one item in three.

Prescription Charges: increases in pence and percentage terms June 1979 to April 1992.

Liverpool Family Service Unit

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received from the Liverpool family service unit respecting funding; and what his response has been.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I have received a letter from the chairman of the Liverpool family service unit about general funding for the unit. We have also received two applications from the Liverpool family service unit for funding specific projects and these are currently under consideration; it is not however our usual practice to fund local projects from the Department unless they are of national significance.

In responding to the letter from the chairman of the Liverpool family service unit I have pointed out that the overall standard spending assessment—the Government's view of the appropriate level of local authority expenditure—for children's services in 1991-92 showed an increase of 18·4 per cent. over 1990-91, partly in order to take account of the implementation of the Children Act. In 1992-93, the first full year of the Children Act, standard spending on children's services will be over 27 per cent. higher than in 1990-91, or up nearly 14 per cent. in real terms over the two year period.

It is for local authorities to decide how to encourage the provision of services by other, in particular voluntary, organisations within their own area. It is also for authorities to determined in the light of local circumstances the distribution of resources for services within their area.

Children Act 1989

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what additional financial assistance he plans to provide to (a) local authorities and (b) voluntary organisations in order to enable them to carry out their duties under the provisions of the Children Act 1989; and if he intends to review the situation.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have allowed for the full implementation of the Children Act in the local authority settlements for 1991-92 and 1992-93. Included in the latter is the introduction of a specific grant of £5·7 million to support expenditure of £8·1 million on the guardian ad litem and reporting officer service.

We discuss with the local authority associations new pressures on social services expenditure each year to inform the Government's decision on the settlement.

Voluntary organisations do not as such have duties under the Children Act except in relation to children looked after by them under section 61. This largely repeats their duties under section 64 of the Child Care Act 1980. Where voluntary organisations carry out duties on behalf of local authorities, such as under sections 17 and 47 of the Act, we would expect the authority to enter into a contract which sets out the financial basis upon which those duties are undertaken.

The Government also provide support to a wide range of voluntary organisations in the child care field under section 64 of the Health Services and Public Health Act 1968.

Radiation

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what advice his Department has issued to the public of the risk to health from the increased ultra-violet radiation resulting from ozone depletion.

Mr. Dorrell: The National Radiological Protection Board advises that its solar monitoring programme has not revealed any increase in ground levels of UV beyond the variations that would normally be expected.

With regard to exposure to UV generally, the Health Education Authority publications, "Are you dying to get a suntan?" and "Can you avoid cancer? A guide to reducing your risks", contain advice on the health risks from UV light. Copies are available in the Library.

The Department proposes to seek advice from the Committee on Medical Aspects of Radiation in the Environment on what further action may be appropriate in the light of the studies referred to in the replies I gave the hon. Member on 20 December 1991 at columns 353-54.

Patients' Fares

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether trust hospitals will operate the same system for the payment of fares for in-patients and out-patients as health authority hospitals.

Mr. Dorrell: All national health service units, whether trusts or directly managed, have a statutory obligation to reimburse fares for those in-patients and out-patients who satisfy the eligibility criteria.

Social Services Training

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what work has been done to evaluate the Department of Health's social services training support programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Government fully recognise the vital importance of training social services staff to meet the challenges of implementing the Children Act, the recommendations of Sir William Utting's report "Children in the Public Care" and our community care changes. The social services training support specific grant will be £29 million in support of £41·4 million expenditure in 1992-93, an increase of nearly 100 per cent. in three years. The arrangements and allocations for local authorities were contained in local authority circular LAC(91)21, issued on 23 December 1991. The training support programme's scope and funding has increased year on year since its commencement in 1988-89, reflecting both its popularity and success in improving the quality and quantity of training for local authority staff. Staff from the voluntary and private sectors have also benefited. Three evaluation reports were published by the Department of Health social services inspectorate on 13 February 1992, on different aspects of the training support programme. Each provides good evidence of the success of the training support programme in increasing the availability of training for social services staff, and an indication of the benefits this brings for service provision.

Copies of the documents mentioned are available in the Library.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Legislation (Plain English)

Sir Robin Maxwell-Hyslop: To ask the Lord President of the Council whether he will set a timetable for privatising the drafting of Government Bills and statutory instruments with the remit (a) that the draft shall state on its face what it does, without reference save in appendices, to existing legislation, (b) that it shall wherever possible employ comprehensible English terminology and grammar, (c) that it shall avoid ambiguity and alternative possible constructions and (d) that such drafts of statutory instruments unamendable by Parliament shall undergo special scrutiny before being laid before Parliament; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: There are no plans to set such a timetable. Privatisation is not necessary to achieve the objectives detailed at (b) and (c) of my hon. Friend's question. As to (a), reference to existing legislation is in some contexts unavoidable, and as to (d) I believe that the Joint Committee on Statutory Instruments already performs an effective service for both Houses.

Parliamentary Questions

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Lord President of the Council when he will respond to the recommendation in paragraph 130 of the Select Committee on Procedure's third report of Session 1990-91 on parliamentary questions, concerning Government Departments' use of answers pursuant to previous answers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: I am still considering the report and will reply in due course.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Family Credit

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many children are in families receiving family credit;

(2) how many families were receiving family credit at the latest available date; and if he will break these figures down into (a) one-parent and two-parent families and (b) one-earner and two earner families.

Mr. Jack: The latest available information upon which a breakdown on the basis requested can be provided is for the end of July 1991, when there were 754,000 children in the 355,000 families receiving family credit. The latter figure breaks down as follows:

	Number
(a) One parent families	133,000
Two parent families	222,000
(b) One earner families	338,000
Two earner families	17,000

Local Offices

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are his plans for the development of a new Paisley office; and when he expects works to commence and be completed.

Miss Widdecombe: The development of local Benefits Agency offices is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what new-build or capital works were undertaken in relation to the Johnstone office in each year since 1980; and what was the value of these works;

(2) if he will publish a table showing the amount spent on (a) furniture and fittings, (b) interior decorations, (c) carpeting and floor coverings and (d) works associated with office redesign at the Johnstone office in each year since 1980.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested is in the table.

New build/Capital works

	Office redesign works	Maintenance (external fabric improvements)
1985-86	nil	1,821
1986-87	nil	734

Figures prior to April 1988 do not include any work projects over £2,500, which were the responsibility of the Department of the Environment.

1989-90	26,451	1,000	21,500
1990-91	12,021	nil	nil

The information which I have provided does not include the years prior to 1985-86 as it is not readily available.

The amount spent on works associated with office redesign has been shown in the new-build/capital figures.

Expenditure

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish the latest figures showing the spending per head on social security benefits in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) Wales.

Miss Widdecombe: The information is not available in the form requested. Benefit expenditure in Northern Ireland is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland. Regional breakdowns of current levels of benefit expenditure are not available.

Estimated average spending on social security per head of the population in Great Britain in 1991-92 is about £1,225.

Disposable Income

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what information he has on the disposable income available on a wage of £150 per week to (a) a lone parent with two children and (b) a four-person family.

Mr. Jack: The information is given in the tables. All assumptions are set out in the published tax benefit model tables. Each family is assumed to live in council property appropriate to its size and to pay estimated average rent and community charge.

It should be noted that the results in the tables remain arbitrary. They cannot reflect, except by chance, the actual circumstances of particular people, and cannot claim to be representative of the population at large. The tables use hypothetical rents, so they do not reflect the full range of housing costs which people can pay. My hon. Friend may further wish to note that the tax/benefit model tables show the total net income on income support for each family type and this information has been included in the tables.

Single parent with two children aged four and six

Gross earnings (£pw)	Take home pay (£pw)	Family credit (£pw)	Child benefit (£pw)	Total net income (£pw)	Net income after rent and community charge (£pw)
150·00	126·75	12·55	22·35	161·65	130·92

Total Net income on income support = £115·06
Net income after rent and community charge on income support = £84·33

Married couple with two children aged four and six

Gross earnings (£pw)	Take home pay (£pw)	Family credit (£pw)	Child benefit (£pw)	Total net income (£pw)	Net income after rent and community charge (£pw)
150·00	126·75	12·55	16·75	156·38	120·95

Total net income on income support = £136·97
Net income after rent and community charge on income support = £101·54

Cold Weather Payments

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security in the month of January on Merseyside how many people in receipt of income support or housing benefit were registered as in receipt of old age pension, disabled and having children under five years; and how many of those so registered received cold weather payments.

Miss Widdecombe: I understand from Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency, that the information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Industrial Asthma

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will issue guidelines with a view to assisting compensation claims in respect of industrial asthma being more quickly settled.

Mr. Scott: We are not aware of undue delay in deciding industrial injuries benefit claims for occupational asthma.

Residential Care Homes

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will state for each year since 1979 the total amount paid in supplementary benefit or income support towards (a) private residential care home fees, (b) private nursing home fees and (c) voluntary care home fees including estimated expenditure for the current financial year; and if he will express each element as a percentage of total expenditure for each year.

Miss Widdecombe: The available information is shown in the table:

Year	Residential care homes £ million	Nursing homes £ million	Annual equivalent expenditure £ million
December 1979	—	—	10
December 1980	—	—	18
December 1981	—	—	23
December 1982	—	—	39
December 1983	—	—	104

Year	Residential care homes £ million	Nursing homes £ million	Annual equivalent expenditure £ million
December 1984	—	—	200
December 1985	—	—	348
February 1986	—	—	459
May 1987	—	—	671
May 1988	—	—	878
May 1989	659 (60 per cent.)	446 (40 per cent.)	1,105
May 1990	741 (58 per cent.)	529 (42 per cent.)	1,270
May 1991	888 (47 per cent.)	984 (53 per cent.)	1,872
[1]1991-92	930 (48 per cent.)	1,020 (52 per cent.)	1,950

[1] Figures for 1991-92 are the estimated outturn of total income support expenditure on homes for the year.

Notes:

1. Figures for December 1979 to December 1984 are taken from the annual statistical inquiry; figures for December 1985 to May 1991 are taken from the quarterly statistical inquiry and are based on "snapshot" data.
2. Separate data are not readily available for residential care homes and nursing homes before May 1989 and to obtain it would involve disproportionate cost.
3. Separate data are not collected for voluntary homes.

Child Benefit

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would have been the value in 1992 prices of child benefit had it, since its inception, been increased annually by the equivalent of the rise in the value of (a) the retail price index and (b) average earnings.

Mr. Jack: The full child benefit scheme started in April 1979 when the rate of benefit was £4 a week. Using the movements in the relevant indices between the April 1979 and October 1991 uprating dates the values would have been (a) £9·95 and (b) £12·94. Comparable information is not yet available for April 1992, when we are again increasing both levels of child benefit.

Select Committee Reports

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he plans to publish the Government's response to the fourth report of the Social Security Committee, Session 1990-91, and to the first report of the Health Committee, Session 1991-92.

Miss Widdecombe: The Government's response was published today and copies have been placed in the Library.

Pension Schemes

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security on how many occasions he has used his discretionary power to ensure that beneficiaries of pension schemes wound up because of insolvency have been guaranteed the guaranteed minimum pension.

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 6 February 1992]: The numbers of occupational pension schemes which wound up, for whatever reason, with insufficient funds to make the necessary payments to buy the members back into SERPS and had those payments treated as paid are in the table. Separate figures in respect of those cases where the employing company had become insolvent are not available.

Occupational Pensions

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security on how many occasions the Occupational Pension Board has used the powers under the Social Security Pensions Act 1975 to prevent breaches in the conditions upon which a contracting out certificate has been granted.

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 6 February 1992]: I understand from the Occupational Pensions Board that the number of individual contracting out certificates cancelled because of a salary-related occupational pension scheme's failure to meet the financial requirements set by the board has been as follows:

	Number
1981	3
1982	12
1983	19
1984	28
1985	30
1986	29

1988	18
1989	107
1990	81
1991	100
[1]1992	Nil

[1] To date.

Note: The upturn since 1989 in the main reflects problems experienced in one life office responsible for a large number of small schemes.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list which pension issues he has referred to the Occupational Pensions Board for its consideration; and if he will list the reports the Occupational Pensions Board has made in respect to each of these references.

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 7 February 1992]: In fulfilling specific remits from successive Secretaries of State under section 66 of the Social Security Act 1973, the Occupational Pensions Board has considered and reported on the following issues:

Solvency, Disclosure of Information and Member Participation in Occupational Pension Schemes
(Cmnd. 5904: February 1975);

Equal Status for Men and Women in Occupational Pension Schemes
(Cmnd. 6599: August 1976);

Occupational Pension Scheme Cover for Disabled People
(Cmnd. 6849: June 1977);

Improved Protection for the Occupational Pension Rights and Expectations of early leavers
(Cmnd. 8271: June 1981);

Greater Security for the Rights and Expectations of Members of Occupational Pension Schemes
(Cmnd. 8649: October 1982);

Protecting Pensions: Safeguarding Benefits in a Changing Environment
(Cm. 573: February 1989).

The terms of reference for each remit are in each of the reports, copies of which are available in the Library.

In addition, the board has reported on numerous sets of draft regulations referred to it for consideration.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the company in each case where he has used his powers since 1979 to provide guaranteed minimum pensions after insolvency; and what was (a) the total cost and (b) the average remaining pension shortfall in each case.

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 11 February 1992]: The information is not available in the form requested because the Department deals with pension schemes rather than with the associated companies. Records are not, therefore, maintained of the companies concerned. Similarly, the remaining pension shortfall after the members' rights in SERPS have been restored is not known. The number of occupational pension schemes winding up, for whatever reason, with insufficient funds to buy the members back into SERPS, the amounts for buying back into SERPS that have been treated as paid and the amounts of those payments subsequently recovered are in the table. Separate information in respect of cases where an associated employer has become insolvent is not collected.

Benefit Deductions

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many households, from data taken for the annual statistical inquiry, in 1990 and 1991, are having weekly deductions made from their supplementary benefit or income support, as appropriate, for electricity and how many for gas (a) under £2 per week and (b) in each £1 band above £2 per week up to £40 per week.

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 13 February 1992]: The information required for 1990 on deductions from income support for electricity and gas is given in the table. No data are currently available from the 1991 Annual Statistical Enquiry.

SCOTLAND

Privatisation (Forestry Commission)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson) on 30 January, Official Report, columns 633-34, if he will make a statement on the basis of the calculation of the privatisation proceeds of the Forestry Commission for 1991-92; how much land he expects to be sold; and how much income has been received to date.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The sum of £16 million quoted in the answer to which the hon. Member refers is the estimated proceeds from the disposal of Forestry Commission land and buildings in 1991-92, as part of the programme of disposals announced by my right hon. and learned Friend the member for Edinburgh, Pentlands (Mr. Rifkind), on 16 June 1989, Official Report, columns 544-45. The commission expects to sell about 10,000 hectares during the year. Some £12 million had been received by 21 January, the latest date for which figures are available.

Industrial Diseases

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is taking to speed up the fixing of hearing dates for compensation claims made by retired industrial workers suffering terminal illnesses.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish Law Commission will shortly be publishing a report on the adverse effects created by the death of parties pursuing certain types of reparation action: the report will pave the way for a reform of the present law.

Expedited ie "fast stream" procedures for the disposal of certain repatriation actions already exist in the supreme courts and the courts are aware of the need to accelerate in-court procedures where special circumstances apply, subject always to the need to preserve the rights and interests of all parties to a litigation.

In regard to the sheriff courts, the Sheriff Court Rules Council is currently considering proposals for reducing delays in disposing of actions generally, including compensation claims of the type referred to, and a working group is currently examining ways of improving the programming and scheduling of court business.

Prison Service

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about the future organisation of the Scottish Prison Service.

Mr. Lang: I have decided that, under the "next steps" initiative, the Scottish Prison Service will become an Executive Agency within the Scottish Office Home and Health Department. I intend that this should be from 1 April 1993. Consultations with the trade unions will begin shortly.

Traffic Systems, Hawick

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement outlining the current timetable for consideration of the internal traffic management systems in Hawick; and when he now expects to be in a position to authorise the funds and capital consents required to enable work to start to alleviate the current congestion.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 19 February 1992]: I expect a report on proposals to provide improved traffic management in Hawick to be submitted to the Secretary of State by Borders regional council in the course of the next two to three months. Until this report is available it is not possible to estimate the level of funding which would be required.

A7, Hawick

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) whether he is yet in a position to authorise the local roads authority to make progress on any significant road improvement schemes on the A7 trunk route south of Hawick; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what progress has been made to date on the possibility of improving the A7 trunk route south of Hawick at Colterscleuch; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 19 February 1992]: The work undertaken by the A7 management group, in their second interim report, has allowed the identification of sites at Colterscleuch and between Mosspeeble and Bush as presenting opportunities for the creation of new high quality overtaking sections. Borders regional council and Dumfries and Galloway regional council have therefore been commissioned to carry out design work on two "convoy buster" schemes on the A7 at these sites. These schemes will provide important overtaking opportunities for drivers who can find themselves stuck in convoys for some miles on sections of this route even though traffic is light. The schemes should ease hold-ups, relieve driver frustration and reduce the temptation for reckless overtaking on the road between Hawick and the English border. This design work will start in advance of the conclusion of the full study. Approval for the construction phase will be considered as soon as the design and any necessary statutory procedures and land acquisition have been completed.

"Convoy busting" schemes such as the two to be designed for the A7 are being developed on a number of Scottish long-distance single carriageway trunk roads as a means of securing real and rapid improvements for drivers on lightly trafficked routes without the inevitable delay and costs associated with complete re-engineering of a route. In many cases wholesale re-engineering cannot be justified given the high cost and limited traffic.

Excellent progress has also been made in implementing accident remedial measures at ten locations between Hawick and the Border since our proposals were set out in the A7 pamphlet published last year. I look forward to the completion of this work during the current financial year.

I am confident that these measures will bring direct benefits to many drivers through improved journey times and safer driving conditions.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is taking to improve the collection of information on road traffic accidents which are occurring on the A7 trunk route between Hawick and Langholm and which are not being reported; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Information on all injury road accidents reported to the police is provided to the Scottish Office as part of a Great Britain wide system on a report form called stat 19. Damage-only accidents do not have to be reported to the police by drivers and information on them is not therefore collected by the Scottish office. There is no intention of changing this position either for all Scotland or for the A7.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Public Service

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table showing, for each of the last three years for which figures are available, how many applications were received and processed for posts in (a) the Civil Service in Northern Ireland, (b) the Housing Executive, (c) each health and social services board and (d) each education and library board; and how many employees each of these bodies had at the beginning of each such year and the end of the last year.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information requested insofar as it can be readily provided is set out in the following tables.

Air Pollution

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps will be taken by the air quality monitoring network in Northern Ireland to reduce levels of air pollution.

Mr. Needham: The monitoring network is an independent, United Kingdom-wide system operated on behalf of the Department of the Environment. Its work is supplemented locally by the monitoring carried out by a number of district councils.

The data available from all the monitoring systems operating in Northern Ireland provide a basis from which air quality guidelines and targets can be set, and assessments can be made of the efficacy of measures to cut urban pollution. Such measures include the continued introduction of smoke control areas; proposed regulations to control the composition and sale of certain fuels in smoke control areas; catalytic converters in all new petrol-engined cars from 1 January 1993; new MOT emission tests; and tough new standards for diesel vehicles.

Textile Industry

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps he will take to assist job creation in the textile industry in the constituency of South Down; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: The south Down area benefits from the wide range of measures currently undertaken by the Government to promote economic and industrial development throughout Northern Ireland.

Training Statistics

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people have been registered on (a) job training programmes and (b) youth training programmes in the constituency of South Down since 1 April 1988 to 31 March 1991 and from 1 April 1991 to 31 December 1991; and, of these, how many have received full-time employment.

Mr. Needham: From 1 April 1988 to 31 March 1991, 1,436 adults and 2,209 young people and from 1 April 1991 to 31 December 1991, 632 adults and 868 young people entered the job training programme and youth training programme respectively in the constituency of South Down.

Information on the destination of these precise cohorts of entrants is not available. However during the periods mentioned the numbers leaving the job training programme and the youth training programme in this area who were known to have moves into employment were as follows:

	Adults	Young people
1 April 1988 to 31 March 1991	362	830
1 April 1991 to 31 December 1991	231	286

In addition, at 31 December 1991, there were 178 trainees who had entered employment and whose training was continuing within the youth training programme.

Equal Opportunities Commission

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the members of the Equal Opportunities Commission; how many persons are employed by the Commission; and how many of these employees are from the Protestant and Roman Catholic communities.

Mr. Needham: The members of the Equal Opportunities Commission for Northern Ireland are as follows:

Mrs. Mary Clark-Glass (Chairman)
Mr. R. A. Coughlin
Mr. S. B. Dickson
Mrs. P. Feeney
Ms. A. Hegarty
Ms. P. McKeown
Ms. L. Walker
Ms. M. Young

There is currently one vacancy.

At 1 January 1992 the Commission employed 22 staff and, as indicated in the monitoring return due for submission to the Fair Employment Commission, the religious composition of these staff was as follows:

	Number
Protestant	12
Roman Catholic	9
Cannot be determined	1

Pay and Display Car Parks

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the total income for each month to the Department of Environment (Northern Ireland) since the scheme came into operation from pay and display car parks in Larne, County Antrim; and what additional costs have been incurred per month for supervising pay and display car parks in Larne, County Antrim.

Mr. Needham: Since the scheme came into operation on 14 October 1991 the monthly income has been as follows:

October	2,124
November	4,487
December	6,166
January	4,526

Supervision costs are approximately £1,100 per month.

Government Training Centres

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many persons are registered on waiting lists at each of the following government training centres (a) Felden, (b) Ballymena and (c) Ballymoney; and for how long each person has been awaiting training or re-qualification.

Mr. Needham: The following is the information:

Felden training centre—138 (of whom 50 are waiting for short computer courses).

Ballymena training centre—56 (of whom 21 are waiting for short computer courses).

Ballymoney training unit—6.

Information on the length of time that each person has been on the waiting lists could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he will make it possible for government training centres to purchase training from private sector providers or permit persons seeking training or requalification to do so at their nearest approved training facility even if it is in the private sector.

Mr. Needham: It is already possible for training centres of the Training and Employment Agency to purchase training from private and public sector providers in cases where the training required cannot be provided from the training centres' own resources. In practice, however, it is more usual for private sector providers to purchase training from the training centres. Persons seeking training or requalification may do so at any training facility regardless of whether it is in the private or public sector. Government financial support under the youth training and job training programme is available in each case.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what additional costs will be incurred to public expenditure on transport costs in respect of a trainee normally resident in Larne but required to travel for training to (a) Ballymena government training centre and (b) Ballymoney government training centre.

Mr. Needham: The following is the information.

Ballymena Training Centre
By Public Transport—£13·00 per week
By Private Transport—£42·43 per week

Ballymoney Training Unit
By Public Transport—£29·00 per week
By Private Transport—£50·00 per week.

Mr. Needham: I met representatives of the Northern Ireland Association of Community-based Training Organisations to discuss funding issues on 19 February 1992.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many applicants were transferred from the waiting list at Felden training centre during 1991-92 to waiting lists at other training centres.

Mr. Needham: During 1991-92 to date, 48 persons were transferred from the waiting list of Felden training centre to Boucher Road training centre and 29 persons from Felden training centre to Ballymena training centre. All such transfers are with the agreement of the individuals concerned.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what provision is being made for ex GEC/Alsthom employees who are now more than six months unemployed to obtain re-training and re-qualification.

Mr. Needham: Under the restart programme—for those unemployed for six months or more—interviews with ex-GEC Alsthom employees began on 15 January 1992.

To date, all 66 in this group have been interviewed. Twenty-five have made job applications, 17 have applied for training and 19 applied to a job club.

Of the remaining five, three have registered voluntarily for employment and two have been unable to accept any opportunities offered due to domestic circumstances.

Metal-framed Windows

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on which housing estates the Northern Ireland Housing Executive has replaced metal-framed windows in the past six years; and if he will indicate how old the houses are in each instance and the number of houses improved.

Mr. Needham: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive but I have been advised by the chairman that the information is not readily available in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether his Department is continuing research into extremely low frequency communications.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: No. The MOD is currently not pursuing research into this field.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what quantities of (a) low level, (b) intermediate level and (c) high level radioactive wastes are currently stored at (i) Aldermaston, (ii) Burghfield and (iii) Llanishen; and if he will distinguish between materials being temporarily stored and those being permanently stored.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Wastes from all three sites for which a current national disposal route is available are stored on the sites temporarily only pending transfer to a disposal site. No high level waste is produced at any of the sites of the Atomic Weapons Establishment. Low level waste only is produced at Burghfield and Llanishen, and both low and intermediate level wastes are produced at Aldermaston. Long-term storage of wastes, for which no disposal route is currently available, is carried out in purpose-built stores at Aldermaston. The stores are subject to regular monitoring and surveillance, and constitute no danger to the public, the work force or the environment. At December 1991, which is the latest date for which figures are available, the volumes of wastes stored at Aldermaston are 1,800 cu/m of low level waste and 2,100 cu/m of intermediate level waste; at Burghfield no waste is stored; and at Llanishen 19 cu/m of low level waste only is stored.

Uranium

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence to which subheads of which votes costs are attributed by his Department for enrichment in the United States of British uranium for defence purposes.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Such costs are attributed to class 1, vote 2—defence procurement. It would not be in the national interest to reveal further details of vote attribution.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether there are continuing exchanges of British military plutonium for United States highly enriched uranium.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: It would not be in the national interest to disclose such details of the nuclear procurement programme.

Atomic Weapons Establishment, Aldermaston

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date (a) design work and (b) white commissioning started for (i) the A89 building, (ii) the A90 building and (iii) the A91 building at AWE Aldermaston.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The dates for (a) design work and (b) white commissioning are as follows:

(i) A89—design work commenced in 1983; much of the building is already in use, white commissioning of the remainder will begin shortly.

(ii) A90—design work commenced in 1981; the early stages of white commissioning began in 1990.
(iii) A91—design work commenced in 1982; white commissioning began in 1990.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the problems with new building work at AWE Aldermaston has any implications for the dismantling of British nuclear weapons.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: No.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date building A45 at AWE Aldermaston was first declared operational.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The building was first declared operational in 1957.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the role and function of the A89 building at AWE Aldermaston; on what date construction work on this building commenced; on what date building work was completed; and on what date this building is scheduled to be operational.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: A89 provides office, laboratory and other facilities to support buildings concerned with the treatment of radioactive waste. Construction began in 1985 and was completed at the end of 1988. Part of the building is currently in full use, with the rest expected to come into operation later this year.

Trident

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the expenditure on the Trident programme in each year since the beginning of the programme expressed in (a) then year prices and (b) current prices.

Mr. Alan Clark: Expenditure each year since the beginning of the Trident programme is as follows:

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if any nuclear-powered submarines that have been decommissioned or are awaiting decommissioning have been moved since 22 July 1991.

Mr. Alan Clark: No, other than small distances within naval bases.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how long his Department has been carrying out feasibility studies into the options for the disposal of nuclear-powered submarines.

Mr. Alan Clark: Following a decision in 1989 not to pursue the immediate sea disposal of HMS Dreadnought, studies were initiated into alternative methods of disposal for decommissioned nuclear submarines. These studies continue.

Terrorists (Dependants' Claims)

Mr. A. Cecil Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many claims have been made against the Ministry of Defence by dependants of terrorists killed by the security forces in line of duty in the last five years; and what sums were paid in compensation in each of these claims.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Claims data are not maintained in the format requested. The recorded data does not distinguish between dependants of terrorists and others.

Arms Control Implementation Group

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the cost to date for the maintenance and operation of the joint arms control implementation group; and what commitments have been made to support the group in its role.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The joint arms control implementation group (JACIG) was established at RAF Scampton in 1990 and became fully operational on 1 January 1991. Since then, JACIG has been involved in a full programme of training, exercises and evaluation visits, thus ensuring that inspections in the United Kingdom and overseas are conducted effectively and in accordance with the terms and spirit of the Vienna document and INF treaty; and of the CFE treaty once it enters into force. The initial setting-up cost for JACIG was £1·4 million at current prices; running costs have totalled £3·2 million at current prices to date.

Seismic Monitoring

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what contribution United Kingdom scientists have made to the group of scientific experts on technical test 2 seismic monitoring system established in April 1991 by the group of scientific experts of the United Nations Committee on Disarmament.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The group of scientific experts (GSE), a group established under the auspices of the United Nations conference on disarmament, set up a six week experiment called the GSE technical test. The United Kingdom participated fully in this experiment which involved the transmission of data of each seismic disturbance detected by the United Kingdom national seismic station located at Eskdalemuir, Scotland. The data were used by experimental international data centres to produce a daily bulletin of seismic disturbances.

Type 22 Frigates

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 13 February, Official Report, column 632, how many of the type 22 batch 1 frigates have been modified to provide extra accommodation for young officers; at what cost; how many officers will undertake initial sea training in each ship; for what periods of time; and how many type 22 batch 1 frigates will at any one time be unavailable for normal operations as a result.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Three type 22 batch 1 frigates have been converted: HMS Broadsword, HMS Brazen and HMS Brilliant, HMS Battleaxe is to follow later in the year. The cost of these modifications to date has been in the order of £514,000.

The modification provides extra accommodation on each ship for up to 65 young officers who will undertake initial sea training (IST) for eight weeks, seven of which are spent at sea. IST will not affect the operational availability of these ships.

Tugs

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 12 February, Official Report, columns 511-12, whether the costs of the new tugs Impetus and Impulse will be attributed to the Trident programme.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Grendon Prison

Mr. Jopling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners are awaiting admission to Grendon prison.

Mrs. Rumbold: A total of 245 prisoners were on the waiting list for transfer to Grendon prison on 14 February 1992.

Filipino Wives

Mr. Summerson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Filipino wives of British husbands have been refused entry to the United Kingdom since August 1988; and how many have been admitted.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is available only in respect of such wives applying in the Philippines for entry clearance for settlement in the years 1990 and 1991. This is given in the table.

Annual figures on admissions of wives or fiancees of Filipino nationality are published in table 1 of Cm 1571, "Control of Immigration: Statistics, United Kingdom 1990", a copy of which is in the Library. These admission figures include Filipino wives and fiancees granted entry clearance other than in the Philippines and any joining non-British husbands settled in the United Kingdom. They do not take account of the year in which the entry clearance was granted.

Unlawful Killings, Lambeth

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many unlawful killings took place in Lambeth in 1991.

Mr. John Patten: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that there were 19 unlawful killings in the borough of Lambeth in 1991.

"Getaway"

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration he has given to the representations made to him by the hon. Member for Liverpool, Mossley Hill concerning the publication and sale of manuals on sale at Soldier of Fortune shops in Liverpool; what steps he is taking to ban their publication; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: I understand that the hon. Member wrote to my right hon. Friend on 18 February about the sale of a book entitled "Getaway" which is alleged to contain information on illegal and dangerous ways of driving.

Ministers do not have the power to ban or censor books or other publications. However, it is an offence to publish a work which is obscene, which incites its readers to crime, or which is otherwise a breach of the criminal law. It is for the police to investigate any allegation of an offence and for the courts to decide whether an offence has been committed in any particular case; Ministers cannot intervene in either of these processes. I understand that in this particular case the owners of the shops concerned have decided to withdraw the book from sale.

Project Comtram

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he is taking to sustain Project Comtram and the community lawyer scheme, funded under section 11, in Bradford; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Decisions on the eligibility of projects for funding under section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966 have been made in accordance with policy and administrative criteria laid down under new arrangements for the administration of the grant which were announced in October 1990, when local authorities were invited to bid afresh for funding from 1 April 1992. Applicants were required to demonstrate that proposals were within the policy criteria and fulfilled key requirements of a procedure designed to ensure that the available funding is targeted to achieve maximum benefit for members of ethnic minorities. Applications for the projects in question failed in key respects and were not approved.

Criminal Justice Act 1991

Mr. Hague: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to bring the remaining provisions of the Criminal Justice Act 1991 into force.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I have today made a commencement order which will bring into force from 1 October 1992 most of the remaining provisions of the Act, including the bulk of the new sentencing framework. The order will also bring into force from 1 April 1992 the provisions relating to the inner London probation area (section 75) and court security officers (sections 76 to 79). A consultation paper setting out detailed proposals for implementing the provisions on curfew orders and electronic monitoring (sections 12 to 13) will be issued shortly, and these provisions will be brought into force as soon as possible after consultation. The provision in section 60 which will replace remand to custody for 15 to 16-year-old boys by remand to local authority secure accommodation will be implemented when sufficient local authority secure accommodation is available.

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Sunday Trading

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, as representing the Church Commissioners, what response they have received to their letters as shareholders to public companies allegedly in breach of the Shops Act 1950; and what further action they intend to take.

Mr. Alison: Those companies to which the commissioners wrote whose stores had opened on Sundays took the line that the law was unsatisfactory and in need of reform, that they had not particularly wanted to open on Sundays but felt under pressure to do so from competitors. The commissioners will continue to monitor the situation.

EMPLOYMENT

Pay Statistics

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the information on full-time workers' pay for the west midlands and, if available, cities and counties within the region, and for comparison England, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland, as given for Scottish regions in his answer to the hon. AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Foxes

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what information he has as to the number of foxes living in the larger urban areas of Great Britain; and how the density of the fox population in urban areas compares with that in rural areas;

(2) what surveys his Department has carried out into the health hazards associated with the presence of foxes in urban areas.

Mr. Maclean: The average fox population density in cities varies between 1:2·24 fox families per square kilometre. However higher densities are found in some cities up to 8·5 adult foxes per square kilometre. In rural areas fox densities vary widely, depending on habitat, between one fox per 30 hectares in rich habitats to one pair per 4,000 hectares in poor habitats. This Department has not carried out any surveys into health hazards associated with urban foxes, but they can become infected with a variety of parasites and diseases, including rabies.

Common Agricultural Policy Fraud

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the prospects of eliminating fraud in European Community matters, in particular that associated with the common agricultural policy.

Mr. Curry: The United Kingdom remains at the forefront of the fight against fraud in the European Community. In particular, the United Kingdom continues to press the European Commission for further action to implement, and update, measures included in the 45-point anti-fraud programme adopted in 1989 with our strong support. Substantial progress has already been made; measures in connection with the common agricultural policy include:

- mandatory minimum levels of physical checks on export refunds
- strengthened requirements for annual stocktaking of intervention stocks
- improved procedures for reporting irregularities
- improved procedures for auditing payments
- the inclusion of improved control arrangements in regulations implementing common agricultural policy schemes

ENERGY

Advertising

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how much money was spent on media advertising in February and March 1990 concerning energy efficiency and global warming; and how many coupons requesting booklets were subsequently received as a result of the advertising campaign.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The cost of the March 1990 advertising campaign was £405,959.15; 9,034 information packs were subsequently dispatched.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Assisted Places Scheme

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the expenditure incurred on (a) the assisted places scheme and (b) city technology colleges in each year of the programmes so far, together with the proposed expenditure in future years.

Mr. Eggar: The assisted places scheme was launched in 1981. The city technology colleges programme was launched in 1986. Actual Government expenditure to 1990-91 and estimated and planned expenditure for future years on the APS and the CTC programme are shown in the table. In addition, private sponsors have pledged well over £30 million to the CTC programme.

1993-94 (plans)	84	55
1994-95 (plans)	89	56

Notes: The figures are cash plans rounded to the nearest £ million.

Research (Diseases)

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will state the overall figure spent by the Medical Research Council into research into diseases affecting older people in each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Most diseases affect people of all ages and become more critical in old age. Total expenditure by the MRC over the last five years on all research, including training awards and fellowships, has been:

	£ Thousands
1986-87	125,188
1987-88	135,195
1988-89	149,779
1989-90	172,346
1990-91	181,077

By far the greater part of all that research is potentially relevant to improving the health of any age group, including older people.

Books and Equipment

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the most recent figure for annual expenditure on books and equipment in schools, excluding provision for 16 to 19-year-olds.

Mr. Fallon: In 1989-90, the latest year for which actual spending information is available, expenditure in England on books and equipment in nursery, primary, secondary and special schools was some £390 million. Expenditure on provision for 16 to 19-year-olds is not separately identified and is included within this total.

Teachers' Pay

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the most recent figure for the annual cost of teacher salaries.

Mr. Fallon: In 1989-90, the latest year for which actual spending information is available, expenditure in England on teaching staff in nursery, primary, secondary and special schools was some £7,339 million. This includes gross pay and employers' contributions to national insurance and superannuation.

Student Loans

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his estimate of the cost of student loans in each of the next 10 years.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Student loans are available for all eligible students who apply for them. Levels of expenditure on loans depend on the level of demand and the rates and conditions of loans prescribed in the statutory regulations for each year.

Table 1 in the departmental report of the Department of Education and Science (Cm 1911) sets out planned net public expenditure provision for England and Wales of £137 million for 1992-93, £204 million for 1993-94 and £286 million for 1994-95. We shall review the expenditure plans for future years—and the underlying planning assumptions—in successive public expenditure surveys.

Nursery Education

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his Department's estimate of the extra revenue costs of extending nursery places to 80 per cent. of three and four-year-olds.

Mr. Eggar: The extra revenue costs are difficult to estimate since they would depend on the types of provision and on the precise balance between full-time and part-time attendance. Assuming the current mix of types of provision and modes of attendance, a broad extrapolation from the estimated cost per pupil for all forms of provision made by local education authorities for the under-fives[1] suggests an extra annual recurrent cost of approximately £530 million at 1991-92 prices. In addition there would be capital costs; and costs would also be incurred in training or retaining the additional teaching and ancillary staff who would be needed.

[1] Table 2 of DES departmental report "The Government's Expenditure Plans 1992-93 to 1994-95", Cm 1911.

Further Education

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his estimate of the average hourly cost of a part-time place in a further education college.

Mr. Eggar: The average hourly cost for students in all modes of attendance in a further education college was £2·80 in 1988-89 (the latest year available). There are no figures available for part-time students separately.

Student Fees

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his Department's estimate of the cost of extending an entitlement to student fees to part-time students on higher education courses.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The cost would depend on what decisions were taken about eligible courses, their duration, the maximum fee entitlement and the account to be taken of the personal circumstances of potentially eligible students.

Special Needs Education

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the most recent figure for annual expenditure on services for children with special needs.

Mr. Fallon: In 1989-90, the latest year for which actual spending information is available, school-based expenditure in special schools in England was some £688 million. Expenditure in primary and secondary schools on services for children with special needs attending such schools is not collected separately. The figure for special schools does not include costs of services such as child guidance and educational psychology provided centrally by local education authorities, nor of LEAs' central administration to support special education, as these costs were not apportioned between services in LEAs' expenditure returns.

Student Grants

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his estimate of the cost of uprating the student grant to allow for inflation since it was last uprated.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The cost of increasing the main rates of grant payable under the Education (Mandatory Awards) Regulations 1991 in line with with the Government's current estimate of inflation since those rates were last increased in 1990 would be £66·4 million. This figure assumes student numbers to be consistent with the autumn statement and that no other provisions of the regulations are changed.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Egypt

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to contribute to the social fund project in Egypt to mitigate the social impact of economic reform; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: We are participating substantially in the social fund project through our share of International Development Association and European Community contributions. Our bilateral aid programme for Egypt is fully allocated to other priority development areas agreed with the Egyptian Government.

CIS

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what additional staff have been recruited to deal with aid to the Commonwealth of Independent States by (a) the Overseas Development Administration and (b) the EC.

Mrs. Chalker: (a) At present we have 34 staff from the Overseas Development Administration dealing with aid to the Commonwealth of Indpependent States and other eastern European countries. Precise disaggregation would not be realistic. Individuals have not been recruited specifically for these positions, but additional staff have been recruited generally to the ODA to permit the expansion in our activities.

(b) An additional 40 mecu has now been agreed to reinforce the Commission's external activities. We understand that its intention is to establish at least 140 now posts in DGI and convert a further 150 from expert to statutory posts. Many of these additional posts will support the Community aid programmes in the Commonwealth of Independent States.

United Nations Funding

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will review the decision no to fund the second phase of the United Nations international fund for agricultural development.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Bradford, West (Mr. Madden) on 12 February at column 528.

PRIME MINISTER

London School of Economics

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Prime Minister if he will set out the action necessary by the relevant Government Departments for the London School of Economics to be successful in its bid to move to the old London county council building on the south bank.

The Prime Minister: The London School of Economics has as yet made no formal bid to the London Residuary Body, which is responsible to the local taxpayers of London for the disposal of county hall, for the acquisition of the site. Should it do so my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Science would then be in a position to consider the matter in consultation with the residuary body.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Appeals, North East Region

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the number of appeals heard and decided by tribunals concerning (a) mobility allowances, (b) attendance allowances, (c) invalidity benefit, (d) injury and disablement benefit and (e) non-income related benefit in the North East region in the last two years.

Mr. Scott: The latest available annual statistics for social security appeal tribunals and medical appeal tribunals are for the year ending December 1990. The relevant information for the north-east region is given in the tables.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his Department's estimate of the cost of restoring student entitlement to housing benefit.

Miss Widdecombe: Based on information available when the new arrangements for student benefit entitlement were introduced, the estimated cost of restoring housing benefit entitlement to those students who are not currently eligible is estimated to be around £70 million at current prices.

Income Support

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will set out his Department's management statistics for the total number of claimants on income support, plus separately their partners and dependants, for each month since January 1990.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested is not available. Liveload figures based on May 1990 annual statistical enquiry, the latest date for which information is available, are as follows.

	Number
Total number of claimants:	4,180,000
Total number of partners:	691,000
Total number of dependent children:	2,045,000

Pensions

Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security why the increase promised by the Secretary of State, in his statement on 21 October 1991, to pensioners over the age of 80 years, and which is to be effective from 1 April 1992, does not appear in newly issued pension books.

Miss Widdecombe: The administration of income support is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and Public Information Office.

Income Support

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his Department's estimate of the cost of restoring student entitlement to income support during the summer; and what was the cost in the last year before it was removed.

Miss Widdecombe: The estimated expenditure on income support for students during the 1990 summer vacation was about £27 million. The estimated cost of restoring student entitlement to income support during the summer vacations, based on information available when the present arrangements were introduced, would be around £30 million at current prices.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many prescription items were dispensed by retail pharmacists in Wales in each year from 1977 onwards; and if he will publish the figures according to age categories of the consumers.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Information on the number of prescription items dispensed is given in the table.

TRANSPORT

Shipping North Sea

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many vessels operating in support of the North sea oil industry, United Kingdom sector, are under (a) the British flag and (b) foreign flags, by country.

Mr. McLoughlin: On 31 January 1992, there were 147 vessels operating as supply, anchor handling and other support vessels and, in addition, 176 standby vessels in the United Kingdom sector of the North sea in support of the oil industry. The countries of registration and the numbers involved were:

Support Vessels	Number
United Kingdom	86
Norway	22
Denmark	10
Netherlands	8
Germany	3
Others	18

Standby Vessels	Number
United Kingdom	149
Isle of man	9
Bermuda	2
Norway	2
Netherlands	1
Cayman Islands	4
Bahamas	4
United States of America	5

Rail Privatisation

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will delay publication of the White Paper on railway privatisation until after the general election.

Mr. Freeman: We will publish our White Paper as soon as we are ready.

Flight Safety

Mr. Haselhurst: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the future of co-ordination of research effort in matters of flight safety.

Mr. McLoughlin: In the United Kingdom the Civil Aviation Authority is responsible for co-ordinating research on civil flight safety. The machinery for this co-ordination is being reviewed, so as both to increase managerial accountability within the authority and to obtain additional advice from outside.

Research on flight safety in Europe is co-ordinated as appropriate through the joint aviation authorities or Eurocontrol. I expect to see more extensive co-ordination of research in this field in the years ahead.

Severn Bridge

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what percentage increase in tolls on the Severn bridge will be introduced in April; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: [holding answer 20 February 1992]: The tolls which will apply from 26 April, as provided for under the Severn Bridges Act 1992, involve the following increases over the current tolls at the Severn bridge, based on the cost of a return trip over the bridge:

	Per cent.
Cars and motor caravans	40
Light vans and minibuses	180
Buses and goods vehicles	110

These increases are a reflection of the cost of building the second Severn bridge, which will provide a substantial and eagerly awaited improvement in the road links between south Wales and England.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Civil Service (Scotland)

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list how many non-Scottish Office civil service jobs there are in Scotland by Government Department and location of employment.

Mr. Maples: The number of non-industrial civil servants employed in Scotland—other than in the Scottish Office—at 1 October 1991 totalled 37,926. Table 1 gives a detailed breakdown by Department and by Scottish region.

In addition, another 6,355 industrial civil servants were employed in Scotland—other than in the Scottish Office—at 1 April 1991 (the latest available information). Table 2 gives a departmental analysis. No breakdown by Scottish region is available.

Income Tax

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the loss of revenue from income tax at (a) the standard rate and (b) the higher rate, of allowing husbands and wives to aggregate their incomes for tax purposes and divide by two; and whether he will publish a table showing the loss by range of total incomes and the number of incomes in each case.

Mr. Maude: Approximate figures at 1991-92 levels of income are given in the table:

Total income £ per year	Number of taxpaying married couples (million)	Revenue loss in a full year £ million
0 to 10,000	0·9	400
10,000 to 15,000	2·2	1,700
15,000 to 20,000	2·2	1,800
20,000 to 40,000	2·7	1,900
30,000 to 40,000	1·0	800
40,000 to 50,000	0·4	600
Over 50,000	0·6	1,600
TOTAL	10·0	8,800

These estimates do not allow for any behavioural effect that might result from such a change in the tax system.

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the value of income tax paid by Scottish-based taxpayers.

Mr. Maude: The amount of income tax liability for residents of Scotland was estimated to be £3·49 billion for 1988-89, the latest available year.

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many Scottish-based income tax payers' affairs are handled by tax offices in England and Wales.

Mr. Maude: Of 1·9 million single people and married men liable to income tax in 1988-89 and resident in Scotland, about 400,000 had their income tax affairs handled by tax offices in England and Wales. The corresponding information about married women under independent taxation is not yet available.

Taxation

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing for 1970, 1974, 1979 and 1990-91, the amount collected in (i) (a) employees and (b) employers national insurance contributions, (ii) income tax at the (c) standard and (d) higher rates, (iii) value added tax and (iv) other indirect taxes.

Mr. Maude: The information requested is given in the table.

European Community Fraud

Mr. Gill: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress has been made towards implementing recommendations contained in the European Court of Auditors' report in regard to fraud.

Mr. Maude: The Community took an important step to combat fraud against the Community budget by the adoption, in 1989, of a 45-point action programme, which covers areas of irregularity, particularly in agriculture, identified in the reports of the court. The Commission produces, for consideration by the Council and European Parliament, an annual report on the fight against fraud which details the progress made. The action taken includes steps by the Commission to revise its operating systems, to simplify existing legislation, and to consider new measures to prevent irregularities in the implementation of the budget. The Commission is currently considering the measures needed to bring the 45-point action programme up to date, on the basis of proposals from member states including the United Kingdom.

The further important recent development was the agreement at Maastricht that the treaty should clearly place responsibility on member states to counter fraud affecting the Community's finances. The Maastricht treaty also seeks to strengthen procedures to counter fraud and irregularities by requiring the Court of Auditors to provide a statement of assurance on the reliability of the Community's accounts; by making explicit the Commission's responsibility for sound financial management; and by giving enhanced powers to the European Parliament to examine the Commission on the basis of the court's observations including action it has taken in response. The Government will also continue their active role in the Council, pressing to ensure that the scope for fraud and irregularities continues to be narrowed.

Mortgage Tax Relief

Mr. Battle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the cost to the Exchequer of increasing the maximum limit for mortgage tax relief to (a) £40,000, (b) £50,000 and (c) £60,000.

Mr. Maude: The estimated costs at 1991-92 levels of increasing the ceiling on mortgage interest tax relief are shown in the table.

Ceiling on mortgage interest tax relief	Cost of increasing the ceiling on mortgage interest tax relief for 1991-92[1]
£	£ billion
40,000	0·7
50,000	1·1
60,000	1·3

[1] The estimates are based on the distribution of existing mortgages and therefore exclude behavioural effects which might result from the change and could be substantial.

Privatisation

Mr. Battle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, further to his answer of 10 February, Official Report, column 336, if he will indicate which shares for each of the concerns privatised since 1979 are currently held by (a) individual shareholders, (b) pension funds, (c) domestic companies, (d) overseas companies and (e) others.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 20 February 1992]: This information is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Overseas Private Investment

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the current level of total overseas private investment; and what was the level in 1979 expressed at current prices.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 20 February 1992]: The estimated level of United Kingdom residents' identified direct investment (at book values) and portfolio investment (at market values), excluding public corporations' direct investment overseas, was £312 billion at the end of 1990. The corresponding figure at the end of 1979 was £44 billion (at end-1979 values) or £74 billion (at end-1990 values). Figures for 1991 are not yet available.

Public Service Pay

Dr. Marek: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he has any plans to amend the principle whereby thr rates of civil and public servants are a matter of public record.

Mr. Maples [holding answer 20 February 1992]: There are no plans to change arrangements whereby the Treasury makes publicly available pay scales, maxima and minima for the main civil service grades.

The pay of individual officers will continue to be confidential to the individual, apart from in the case of a small number of senior staff whose pay is a matter of public interest.

Policy for other parts of the public sector is a matter for the organisations concerned.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Dentistry

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the dates on which the equipment recommended in the Poswillo report for resuscitation and monitoring of patients in connection with the provision of general anaesthetic in dentistry was installed in each community clinic in the area of the southern health and social services board; and if he will list those community clinics which have not yet received the equipment.

Mr. Hanley: The community clinics in the Southern health and social services board area which are equipped to the standards recommended in the Poswillo report are as follows:

Clinic
Thomas Street, Dungannon
Dobbin Street, Armagh
St. Luke's Hospital, Armagh
John Mitchell Place, Newry

Each of these clinics met the recommended standards prior to 1990. As to the other clinics in the Southern board, equipment for the Banbridge clinic is currently being ordered, and the Brownlow health centre will be equipped to Poswillo standards when it reopens in the summer.

Cardiac Surgery

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to make provision for a fifth cardiac surgeon at the Royal Victoria hospital, at Belfast.

Mr. Hanley: The Eastern health and social services board is responsible for the management of the cardiac surgery unit at the Royal Victoria hospital. A fourth cardiac surgeon, who is a locum, has recently been appointed and will take up post on 1 May 1992 for a period of one year, with a review and possible extension at the end of that period. I am not aware of any plans to make provision for a fifth cardiac surgeon at the Royal Victoria hospital but I can assure the hon. Gentleman that a very high priority will continue to be accorded to the specialty.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to reduce the waiting lists for cardiac surgery.

Mr. Hanley: The Government have provided significant additional capital and revenue funding to enable more cardiac operations to be carried out at the Royal Victoria hospital. An extension to the cardiac recovery unit costing £1·5 million was completed in October 1991, and funds of £300,000 were made available for a fourth cardiac surgeon and supporting team. A locum surgeon has been appointed and will take up post on 1 May 1992. In addition, health and social services boards are purchasing cardiac operations for their resident populations from other parts of the United Kingdom. It is the Government's intention in respect of the cardiac surgery waiting list to honour, at the earliest possible date, the guarantee in the citizens charter that no one should have to wait for more than two years for a cardiac operation.

Statutory Sick Pay

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the estimated value of savings in public expenditure and the estimated additional cost to employers in Northern Ireland to date of changes in statutory sick pay regulations since 1990.

Mr. Hanley: The estimated value of savings to date is £5 million and the estimated additional cost to employers is correspondingly £5 million.

Public Appointments

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether the Republic of Ireland is now involved in the matter of public appointments in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Irish Government may put forward views and proposals on the role and composition of bodies appointed by the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland or by Departments subject to his direction and control, as envisaged by article 6 of the Anglo-Irish Agreement.

Labour Statistics

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how man Protestants are employed by the establishment in the (a) Newry and Mourne council area and (b) Strabane whose employees are over 90 per cent. Protestant.

Mr. Needham: Monitoring returns submitted to the Fair Employment Commission in 1991 show that there are 118 Protestants employed in such concerns in the Newry and Mourne council area. There are no concerns in the Strabane council area whose employees are over 90 per cent. Protestant.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many Roman Catholics are employed by the establishments in (a) the Newry and Mourne council area, (b) the Omagh council area and (c) Strabane, whose employees are over 90 per cent. Roman Catholic.

Mr. Needham: The information is:

Rural Development

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the total projected expenditure on (a) rural development division of the Department of Agriculture, (b) Rural Development Council for Northern Ireland, (c) interdepartmental committee on rural development and (d) other rural development initiatives in the financial years 1990-91, 1991-92, 1992-93, 1993-94 and 1994-95.

Mr. Hanley: Projected expenditure on the Government's rural development initiative is as follows:

Rural Development Division of the Department of Agriculture

The DANI Rural Development Division has been established progressively since February 1991. Running costs for the year to 31 March 1992 are estimated at £145,000. Projected running costs for 1992-93 are £263,000. Subject to pay and prices increases the running costs for subsequent years are projected at a similar level.

Northern Ireland Rural Development Council

The Northern Ireland rural development council was established on 31 July 1991. Expenditure by the council in 1991-92 is estimated at £396,000, including both running costs and assistance to community-based rural development groups. Financial allocations to the rural development council for 1992-93 and subsequent years have not yet been finalised pending the outcome of the council's deliberations on its strategic plan and budgetary requirements.

Inter-Departmental Committee on Rural Development

The costs of the committee have been absorbed within existing provision.

Other Rural Development Initiatives

1990-91—£234,000, financed in part by the EC, was incurred on rural development pilot projects.

1991-92—Expenditure on rural development projects is estimated at £248,000, financed in part by the EC.

Allocations for 1992-93 and subsequent years have not yet been finalised and will depend on, among other things, the outcome of the rural development council's strategy and budget discussions as well as the pattern of expenditure on the NI LEADER programme—for which £4 million is available from EC and national resources—and on any rural development projects under the community development measure of the EC INTERREG initiative.

Housing Executive (Replacement Grant)

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give full details of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive's replacement grant scheme.

Mr. Needham: I have been informed by the chairman of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, which is responsible for the administration of the house renovation grants scheme, that details of the scheme are as follows.

Replacement grants are available in respect of those dwellings where on technical and cost grounds, replacement is a more effective solution than improvement. The executive will decide through technical surveys of the dwelling and through value for money assessment—economic assessment—which dwellings will be suitable for a replacement option. In general, dwellings which are suitable subjects for improvement at reasonable costs will not be considered for replacement.

Replacement will predominantly be aimed at rural properties which are considered necessary and viable to meet the housing requirements of the rural population. Such dwellings are likely to be occupied or have recently been occupied. Where vacant, the executive will have to be satisfied that replacement will be specifically required to meet the current housing needs of the applicants or members of his or her household as sole residence for the foreseeable future. Alternatively, such dwellings will be required to be available for letting.

All new dwellings provided under this scheme will be required to meet standards set down by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive and the normal statutory approvals—planning, building control, etc.—will be required.

The replacement grant will initially operate within the terms of the existing improvement grants legislation, and grant will be limited to the maximum grants applicable to the current improvement grants scheme.

The details are as follows:

1. £9,450 at the 75 per cent. grants level.
2. £11,340 at the 90 per cent. (financial hardship) grants level.

In cases where the higher eligible expense level applies for the first time, service provision in excess of £1,500 the maximum grant levels will be increased as follows:

1. £12,450 (75 per cent.)
2. £14,940 (90 per cent.)

To qualify as being in financial hardship, applicants must be receiving housing benefit or rate rebate, income support or family credit continually for at least six months before making a formal application for grant or before the executive gives formal grant approval.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when decisions will be issued in respect of applications for replacement grants submitted in the past six months.

Mr. Needham: I have been informed by the chairman of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, which is responsible for the administration of the house renovation grants scheme, that no formal applications for replacement grants have been submitted in the past six months. I am also informed that to date the executive has only received preliminary inquiries and that decisions on these will be issued in individual cases where replacement is determined to be the appropriate course of action. Formal applications supported by the required documentation will then have to be submitted for processing and approval.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many applications for replacement grants have been received by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive; and in how many cases a decision has been issued;

(2) how many replacement grants have been awarded by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive.

Mr. Needham: I have been informed by the chairman of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, which is responsible for the administration of the house renovation grants scheme, that no completed formal applications have yet been received and as a result no replacement grants have yet been awarded.

Water Charges

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many requests for a reduction in water charges were received by the Department of the Environment (Northern Ireland) in each year since 1985, in each water board area; and in how many cases reductions were agreed.

Mr. Needham: Information on the number of requests for a reduction in water charges is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

The numbers of reductions granted are as follows:

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the annual figures for (i) road deaths and (ii) injuries for each year since 1981, including the number of (a) children and (b) adults who have been hit by cars on or near pedestrian crossings.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 14 February 1992]: The available information is set out in the table:

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Mr. Abdul Rauf

Mr. Madden: To ask the Attorney-General whom the appellate authorities notified when an appeal by Mr. Abdul Rauf, TH/19383/89, against refusal to grant a visa to visit the United Kingdom was upheld; when the notification was sent; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The immigration appellate authorities (IAA) notified the United Kingdom Immigrants Advisory Service at Leeds and the Home Office on 26 September 1990 of the adjudicator's decision to allow Mr. Abdul Rauf's appeal.

The IAA's records indicate that the correct procedures were used to notify the parties of the outcome of this appeal.

Mortgage Repossessions

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list the numbers of mortgage repossession actions entered and orders made in the Coventry and Warwickshire area by county court division in each year since 1987.

The Attorney-General: The table gives the total number of mortgage possession actions entered and orders made in the Coventry county court and each of the three county courts in Warwickshire for each year since 1987. These figures do not indicate how many houses have been repossessed through the courts as not all of the orders made will have resulted in the issue and execution of warrants of possession. At this stage the 1991 figures are provisional and therefore liable to revision in the future.

Admission Appeals

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Attorney-General how many applications against refusal of admission made in Dhaka are awaiting determination by the Immigration Appeal Tribunal in the United Kingdom.

The Attorney-General: The information requested is not readily available because the Immigration Appeal Tribunal does not record the statistics sought by the hon. Member. In October 1991 there were 14 applications against refusal of admission made in Bangladesh awaiting determination by the appeal tribunal in the United Kingdom.

Executive Agencies

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list the quality of service performance indicators adopted by each of his and the Lord Chancellor's Departments executive agencies since their establishment and separately identify those quality of service performance indicators already operative prior to agency status.

The Attorney-General: The quality of service indicators operating in the Land Registry, the only executive agency of the Lord Chancellor's Department (the Law Officers' Departments have none), are:

(a) speed of processing applications;
(b) accuracy of the work produced;
(c) number of complaints received.

Prior to becoming an agency, standards of service existed for the first two aspects but not in respect of the number of complaints received.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list the new forms of alternative working patterns introduced into each of his and the Lord Chancellor's Departments executive agencies since their establishment and provide a break-down by grade of the numbers of staff taking up each new working pattern for each agency.

The Attorney-General: The Land Registry, as the only executive agency of the Lord Chancellor's Department (the Law Officers' Departments have none) provides a wide range of alternative working patterns which were all introduced before it became an executive agency.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Attorney-General how much was spent on events and publicity surrounding the launch of each of his and the Lord Chancellor's Departments executive agencies; and whether the cost was borne by the parent department or the new agency.

The Attorney-General: The cost of events and publicity surrounding the launch of the Land Registry as an executive agency (the only executive agency of the Lord Chancellor's Department—the Law Officers' Departments have none) in July 1990 was £23,063. This included "open" days which enabled members of the public and others who use the registry's services to visit and see the work of the agency. The whole cost was met by the Land Registry.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Attorney-General how many staff were in post on the date that each of the executive agencies in the Lord Chancellor's and Law Officers' Departments were established; and how many are in post now, in each case.

The Attorney-General: The Land Registry, as the only executive agency of the Lord Chancellor's Department (the Law Officers' Departments have none), became an executive agency on 2 July 1990, at which time there were 10,698 staff employed. The equivalent figure at 1 February 1992 was 9,637 staff.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Attorney-General what is the maximum salary payable to the chief executive of each of his and the Lord Chancellor's Departments executive agencies, including performance-related element, and the length of time of the chief executive's contract in each case.

The Attorney-General: The current maximum salary payable to the chief executive of the Land Registry, the only executive agency of the Lord Chancellor's Department (the Law Officers' Departments have none), including a performance-related element, is £66,100. The contract is for 3¼ years—1 January 1991 to 31 March 1994. It is renewable.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list those new facilities for staff including nurseries and health care schemes which have been introduced in each of his and the Lord Chancellor's Departments executive agencies since their establishment.

The Attorney-General: Since becoming an executive agency in July 1990, the Land Registry, as the only executive agency of the Lord Chancellor's Department (the Law Officers' Departments have none), has established or provided places in eight local holiday play schemes and two local nurseries. This is in addition to six pre-existing holiday play schemes. Six new ventures are currently being evaluated.

Both before and after becoming an agency, the registry has pursued a range of health care measures, such as workplace policies on smoking, cervical cancer screening, and alcohol-related problems; giving publicity to national health campaigns; promoting healthy eating in staff restaurants; and providing awareness counselling and support through a readily accessible welfare service.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Attorney-General what was the first degree obtained by the chief executive of each of his and the Lord Chancellor's Departments executive agencies; and from which university or polytechnic it was awarded.

The Attorney-General: The chief executive of the Land Registry, the only executive agency of the Lord Chancellor's Department (the Law Officers' Departments have none) has not pursued a course of study which would lead to a university or polytechnic degree.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list each of his and the Lord Chancellor's Departments executive agencies that operates a group bonus scheme and state the cash amount per person awarded in the last year for which figures were available and the conditions attached to its award.

The Attorney-General: The Land Registry, as the only executive agency of the Lord Chancellor's Department (the Law Officers' Departments have none), does not operate a group bonus scheme.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list the post, grade and maximum salary payable, including performance-related elements, in each case where appointments have been made to his and the Lord Chancellor's Departments executive agencies at grade 7 or above, since their establishment.

The Attorney-General: The following appointments at grade 7 level and above have been made to the Land Registry since becoming an executive agency in July 1990 (the only executive agency of the Lord Chancellor's Department—the Law Officers' Departments have none):

Post	Grade	Number	Maximum pay £
Chief Land Registrar (Chief Executive)	2	1	66,100
Solicitor to Land Registry	3	1	57,000
Director of Finance	5	1	47,921

Post	Grade	Number	Maximum pay £
Land Registrars	5	1	53,740
Deputy Establishment Officer	6	1	42,724
Controller of Operational Development	6	1	42,724
Head of Development Computer Services	6	1	41,120
Area Managers	6	4	41,120
Senior Assistant Land Registrars	6	4	46,122
Office Manager York	7	1	33,175
Head of Personnel Division 1	7	1	34,667
Head of Internal Audit	7	1	34,667
Principal, Legal Practice	7	1	34,667

Deputy Area Managers	7	7	33,175
Computer Services Divisional Managers	7	2	33,175
Assistant Land Registrars	7	19	37,755

Most of the appointments have been occasioned by retirements and the effect of two restructuring exercises, one based on a Treasury staff inspection report and the other on a review by management consultants.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Attorney-General when the last annual report for each of his and the Lord Chancellor's Departments executive agencies were published; and when the next ones are due.

The Attorney-General: The annual report for 1990-91 of the Land Registry, the only executive agency of the Lord Chancellor's Department (the Law Officers' Departments have none) was published in October 1991. The report for 1991-92 is expected to be available in August of this year.

Legal Aid

Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Attorney-General whether he has any plans to amend the Civil Legal Aid (General) Regulation 1989 to enable charitable or voluntary organisations which are subject to the special limitations imposed by rule 3 of the solicitors' practice rules to obtain payments on account from the Legal Aid Board; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The Lord Chancellor has no proposals to amend the Legal Aid Regulations with regard to payments to charitable or voluntary organisations. Any solicitor acting for an assisted person under a legal aid certificate is entitled to apply for payments on account in accordance with the Civil Legal Aid (General) Regulations 1989.

HEALTH

Hospital and Community Health Services

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give for the northern region and its constituent areas and districts, for each year from 1978-79 onwards, current expenditure on the hospital and community health services (a) in cash terms and (b) adjusted for NHS pay and prices.

Mr. Dorrell: Tables I and II show the information requested for the northern region.

Both tables show expenditure in cash and in input volume terms. Changes in input volumes are, however, an inadequate guide to the level of service the NHS can be expected to achieve, since they do not reflect the continuing success of the NHS in increasing the efficiency with which it uses its resources. The third column of each table therefore shows the relevant expenditure figures in real terms, ie adjusted by the GDP deflator.

Notes to the tables:

1. Expenditure on the HCHS covers services directly managed and/or accounted for by the health authorities (at the relevant time) including hospital, community health, patient transport (i.e. ambulance), blood transfusion and other services.
2. The figures are derived from the annual accounts of the regional health authority (RHA) and the area health authorities (district health authorities from 1 April 1982) comprising the Northern region. 1990-91 figures are as yet subject to audit.
3. The volume input terms column of each table shows the cash figures for the relevant year expressed at 1990-91 prices after adjustment by the HCHS pay and prices index.
4. The real terms column of each table shows the cash figures for the relevant year expressed in 1990-91 prices after adjustment by the GDP deflator.

District Nurses

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the number of whole-time equivalent district nurses employed by each regional health authority in England in 1976, 1981, 1986 and 1991; and if he will list the number of people aged (a) 65 to 74 years, (b) 75 to 84 years and (c) 85 years and above in each of those regional health authorities in each of those years.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information requested is shown in the tables. Information has been provided for 1990, the latest available year.

Notes:

[1] Excludes senior nurses grade 1 to 8 and district nurse students. Includes district nurses, district nurse practical work teachers, registered and enrolled nurses assisting district nurses, dual posts (DN/MID) and bank district nurses.

[2] District nurses are defined by occupation code, not by payscale, and the former is known to be less accurate than the latter. Apparent changes in the figures can be due to changes in coding accuracy by health authorities rather than actual changes in numbers of district nurses.

[3] All figures are independently rounded to the nearest ten (10) whole-time equivalent.

[4] Not adjusted for the reduction in nurses working hours during 1980-81. (From 40 to 37·5 per week).

Fresh Fruit

Mr. Couchman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 6 February, Official Report, column 275, if he will specify the various considerations that led the 1989 Committee on Medical Aspects of Food panel on dietary sugars and human disease to classify fresh fruit, as eaten by humans, as intrinsic sugars.

Mr. Dorrell: The panel found that the physical location of sugars influences their availability for bacterial metabolism in the mouth and the readiness with which they are absorbed after ingestion. For that reason they considered it would be helpful to distinguish between intrinsic and extrinsic sugars. They defined intrinsic sugars as being those which form an integral part of certain unprocessed foodstuffs, and which are enclosed in the cell of the food. The sugars present naturally in fresh fruit and vegetables (mainly fructose, glucose and sucrose) fall within that definition.

Tobacco Advertising

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what position he will adopt concerning the proposed ban on tobacco advertising throughout the European Community when it comes before the Council of Ministers in May; in reaching his decision, what weight he will attach to the opinion of the European Parliament; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: We have noted the opinion of the European Parliament. When the proposal comes to the Health Council, the Government will maintain their position that the proposed directive is unnecessary for the completion of the single market.

Waiting Lists

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if his Department collects individual case histories of patients who have been waiting for over two years.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No.

Child Care

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he intends to apply the Disqualification for Caring for Children Regulations 1991 to the local authority sector.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have no intention of doing so. Although the Disqualification for Caring for Children Regulations do not apply to the local authority sector, volume 8 of the Children Act regulations and guidance series advises that local authorities should have regard to the regulations when considering the appointment of staff to any children's services run by the local authority, and when assessing people's suitability to work as childminders or foster parents employed by a local authority.

In addition, volumes 2—"Family Support, Day Care and Educational Provision for Young Children", 3—"Family Placements" and 4—"Residential Care" in the Children Act series contain clear guidance on the requirement for local authorities to undertake a thorough assessment of the suitability of people who wish to work with children in any service run by the local authority. Compliance will ensure that equivalent measures exist for safeguarding the welfare of children cared for in the local authority sector as those in the private and voluntary sectors.

General Whitley Council

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about his decision to revoke the appeals procedure for national health service employees, General Whitley Council, section 32.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood) on 19 February at columns 206-7.

National Health Service Expenditure

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish table 3 of Cm 1913 adjusted for input unit costs.

Mr. Dorrell [pursuant to his reply, 18 February 1992 112-14.]: I regret that there was an error in the table. The last two columns of the table were incorrectly calculated. A revised table is as follows.

ENVIRONMENT

Fair Rents

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to ensure that fair rents for regulated tenants in private properties are based on the same valuation as that made for council tax.

Mr. Yeo: None. Fair rents are not based on the capital values of property with vacant possession, but are determined according to the rules set out in section 70 of the Rent Act 1977. The valuation bands to be used for council tax purposes are not suitable for setting rents. We have no plans to change the way in which fair rents are set for regulated tenancies.

Planning Advice

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will now bring forward regulations under section 150 of the Local Government and Housing

Act 1989 to enable local authorities to recover their costs in providing pre-planning application advice and other related services.

Mr. Yeo: The Department encourages local authorities to discuss development proposals with applicants before a planning application is submitted. The implications of the recent judgment of the House of Lords that local authorities may not charge for this service are being studied.

Ozone Layer

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps the Government are proposing to take to ensure the eradication of the production of ozone-depleting chemicals at the earliest possible date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: The Government are committed to phasing out CFCs, halons, carbon tetrachloride and methyl chloroform within the United Kingdom by the end of 1995 at the latest. Both United Kingdom producers will cease production of these substances no later than that date. Last week, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment wrote to the president of the EC Environment Council, urging the Community to adopt the strongest possible position in the negotiations towards the revision of the Montreal protocol, which will begin in April.

Development Plans

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he intends to replace the Town and Country Planning (Development Plans) (England) Direction 1981; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: We have today sent to all local planning authorities in England a copy of the Town and Country Planning Development Plans (England) Direction 1992 which comes into effect on 28 February. This replaces the 1981 direction.

The new direction will require authorities to advertise in a local newspaper all applications not in accordance with the development plan and which they do not propose to refuse. This gives the local community the opportunity to comment on and object to such applications; and to ask my right hon. Friend to call them in.

Authorities must also report to my right hon. Friend all such applications which are for major development or which otherwise threaten important policies in the plan. This will enable my right hon. Friend to be aware of significant divergences from the development plan and to consider whether he wishes to call in such applications for his determination. It remains his policy that in general applications will be called in only where planning issues of more than local importance are involved.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales is issuing a similar direction to Welsh local planning authorities.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Defence Sales

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will now make it his practice to provide information about the levels of Export Credits Guarantee Department insurance cover for individual overseas defence sales.

Mr. Sainsbury: No. It has been the policy of successive Governments not to publish details of ECGD cover for individual sales contracts unless all the commercial parties agree.

Advanced Technology Programme

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on what plans he has to announce any further assistance under the advanced technology programme.

Mr. Lilley: Yes. I have approved a £15 million collaborative research advanced technology programme for tracked-transport systems aimed at stimulating R and D expenditure to the end of the century.

This initiative will help United Kingdom firms to gain a greater share of new opportunities in tracked-transport arising out of increasing public concern for the environment and recent advances in new technology.

There will be close co-operation between my Department and the Department of Transport and the programme will be fully in line with the priority given to the railways by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport in his statement on 28 May 1991.

The opening of the channel fixed link and the completion of the single European market including the move to freer public purchasing will present further opportunities.

Hong Kong (Visit)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether, on his visit to Hong Kong in November 1989, the then Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Gosport (Mr. Viggers), took part in party political activities in addition to official duties.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 13 February 1992]: I understand that the hon. Member for Gosport (Mr. Viggers) did not visit Hong Kong in November 1989.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Julie Ward

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will raise with the Attorney General of Kenya during his visit to London the matter of Julie Ward's killing in that country.

Mrs. Chalker: Two Kenyan rangers have been accused of the murder of Julie Ward, and the case is currently sub-judice. It would not therefore be appropriate to raise any substantive points about the case at this stage. The high commission is in touch with the Attorney-General's office in Nairobi about the arrangements for the trial, which we shall be following with the closest attention.

Commonwealth of Independent States

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many visits have been made by Overseas Development Agency and Foreign and Commonwealth Office staff to the Commonwealth of Independent States in connection with aid matters in the last year; and at what approximate cost.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Since 21 February 1991 there have been 14 visits to the former Soviet Union in connection with aid matters involving a total of 19 ODA and FCO staff, some of whom have visited more than once. The approximate cost—airfares and local expenses not met by the host authorities—was £63,000.

Francisco Javier Perez Egert

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will deny diplomatic status to Francisco Javier Perez Egert, recently appointed as military attaché to the Chilean embassy in London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Garel-Jones: Francisco Javier Perez Egert has not been notified to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office as a member of staff of the Chilean embassy and has not been accepted or received as such.

DEFENCE

Beagle Packs

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what arrangements he has to license beagle packs to use land owned, operated or leased by his Department; and if he will list the beagle packs that have such licences.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Two beagle packs have licences to hunt on Ministry of Defence land. These are the Glyn Celyn beagles and the Catterick beagles. The licences to these packs are negotiated by the Defence land agent taking into account the particular requirements of the Defence establishment concerned.

Five other beagle packs have access to Ministry of Defence land under other arrangements.

Nuclear Weapons Safety Committee

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the terms of reference of the Nuclear Weapons Safety Committee.

Mr. Alan Clark: It is not our practice to make these terms of reference public, but I will consider further whether I could help the hon. Gentleman.

HMS Revenge

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date HMS Revenge started its current commission.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: HMS Revenge began its present commission in January 1983.

Civilian Employees

Mr. George: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the number of civilians employed by his Department for each of the years 1980 to 1992.

Mr. Alan Clark: The information requested is as follows:

	Number
1980	218,026
1981	208,761
1982	197,491
1983	190,334
1984	181,183
1985	174,077
1986	169,462
1987	164,002
1988	143,394
1989	141,317
1990	141,372
1991	140,199
1992	140,024

The figures are based on the total number of MOD civilians in post at 1 April each year with the exception of that for 1992 which relates to 1 January.

Mr. Alan Clark: The available information is as follows:

Flight Safety

Mr. Haselhurst: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future of co-ordination of research effort in matters of flight safety.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Ministry of Defence co-operates closely with the civil aviation community and international aviation authorities on matters of flight safety, including research, and will continue to do so in the future.

HMS Green Rover

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the sale of HMS Green Rover to Indonesia.

Mr. Alan Clark: It has been the consistent policy of successive Governments not to discuss particulars of defence contracts with other countries since these are matters of commercial confidentiality.

RAF Greenham Common

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the hon. Member for Newbury can expect answers to his letter of 13 December, to the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Lord Arran, and to his letters of 20 December and 3 February to the Minister of State for the Armed Forces, relating to RAF Greenham Common.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces will write very shortly to my hon. Friend in response to his letters on 16 and 20 December and 3 February.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Written Answers

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will list the three most expensive answers for which calculations have already been made to parliamentary written questions since 1987.

Mr. MacGregor: I will write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

SCOTLAND

Food Hygiene

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to publish the new Scottish food hygiene regulations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Formal consultations were held last year on proposals to introduce statutory temperature controls for certain foodstuffs. In the light of the responses received, we have more recently had discussions with representatives of trade interests and with local authorities who would be responsible for enforcement. We are considering the issues which have been raised, and will announce our conclusions in due course.

Bus Services

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what response he has given to schemes prepared by Scottish bus companies supported by regional councils following the publication of "Buses Mean Business"; and whether the Scottish schemes will be funded on a similar basis to English ones.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I support the aims of the "Buses Mean business" campaign in Scotland. For this reason, regional and islands councils have been invited to treat bus priority measures as a special objective in their financial plans on which capital allocations are based. The arrangements for central Government support for local authority transport expenditure in Scotland are different from those in England.

Mental Hospitals

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the change in the number of beds in NHS mental hospitals in every year since 1977 in absolute and percentage terms; and the number of day centre places opened in the same period.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The available information on psychiatric beds is shown in the table. Information on numbers of day patient places opened is not centrally available.

Blood Transfusion Service

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the arrangements made for (a) the Scottish National Blood Transfusion Service and (b) the Plasma Fractionation Centre in connection with the transitional arrangements covering removal of Crown immunity status consequent upon the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Following the removal of Crown immunity status from health bodies under the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990, the Scottish National Blood Transfusion Service (SNBTS) and the protein fractionation centre (PFC) were required to apply to the Medicines Control Agency (MCA) for pharmaceutical manufacturer's licence and product licences in order to comply with the legislation. However, the granting of licences by the MCA is an extensive process and in order to ensure continuity of clinical and pharmaceutical services special provisions were made under the Act for transitional arrangements to allow the SNBTS and PFC to continue to operate. Under these arrangements the SNBTS was required to submit all new licence applications and resubmit existing licences held by 31 March 1991. This has been completed.

The PFC has been granted a manufacturing licence and also a number of product licences have been obtained. A group of product licences previously held under the arrangements prior to the removal of Crown immunity are still being processed by the MCA but it is expected that new licences will be obtained shortly.

Constituencies

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the six highest and six lowest numbers of electors in parliamentary constituencies in Scotland; and what is the average constituency electorate in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The latest information available relates to the 1991 register of electors, when the average electorate was 54,369, and is as follows:

Highest parliamentary constituency electorates

	Number
Gordon	78,438
Inverness, Nairn and Lochaber	68,848
East Lothian	67,223
Ayr	66,126
Kincardine and Deeside	65,660
Perth and Kinross	65,135

Traffic, Dairsie

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the results of all traffic surveys his Department has carried out at Dairsie in the last 10 years for which information is available.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Classified traffic counts are carried out at a location on the A91 west of Dairsie at six-yearly intervals. The results of those carried out on the last two counts were:

14 October 1980 5,782 vehicles from 7 am to 7 pm.
14 October 1986 6,438 vehicles from 7 am to 7 pm.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what factors influenced his decision in 1991 not to build a bypass round Dairsie.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The resources available for road building schemes are limited and therefore choices have to be made between the numerous schemes competing for the available funding. Before a feasibility study is carried out, it is necessary to ensure that the benefits arising from a scheme would justify the capital expenditure. In the case of a bypass of Dairsie such an evaluation indicated that this criterion could not be met.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what considerations have caused him to conclude that a controlled pedestrian crossing at Dairsie is not justified.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Counts of pedestrian and vehicular movements on the A91 within Dairsie indicated that the combined movements were less than one quarter of the figure required to justify the provision of a pedestrian crossing.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will institute traffic-calming measures to reduce the speed of vehicles travelling through Dairsie.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Measures to reduce the speed of traffic through Dairsie have already been introduced and further measures are planned for later this year.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will instruct a fresh survey of traffic at Dairsie to determine whether a bypass is justified.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Classified traffic counts are undertaken on a six-yearly cycle at predetermined census points throughout the United Kingdom.

One such census point is located just west of Dairsie and is representative of the traffic flows within the village. The next count at this location is planned for October this year from which it will be possible to determine whether further consideration of a bypass of Dairsie is justified.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many representations he has received in support of a controlled pedestrian crossing at Dairsie; and from whom.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: A total of 64 individual letters have been received from residents of Dairsie supporting the installation of a pelican crossing. In addition two petitions containing in total 266 signatures, including 38 from primary school children, have been received. Some of the signatories to the petitions also wrote individually and are therefore included in both totals.

Pedestrian Crossings

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the criteria which his Department uses when deciding whether a controlled pedestrian crossing is justified.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The criteria for establishing pedestrian crossings are contained in "Technical Memorandum SH 7/87", published by the Scottish Office in February 1987. A copy of this memorandum has been placed in the Library.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number and locations of the controlled pedestrian crossings which his Department has approved in (a) Scotland, (b) Fife and (c) north-east Fife in the last 10 years for which information is available.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The number of pelican crossings currently on trunk roads which have been authorised by the Secretary of State are given in the table. Some of these crossings will have been authorised longer ago than 10 years. Other crossings, originally authorised by the Secretary of State on trunk roads, are not included in the table because the roads concerned are no longer classified as trunk roads.

Bypasses

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many bypasses his Department has funded in (a) Scotland, (b) Fife and (c) north-east Fife in the last 10 years for which information is available; and what sums have been spent in doing so.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The figures requested are as follows:

(a) 38 bypasses at a cost of £373 million,
(b) 1 bypass at a cost of £3·4 million,
(c) none.

These figures exclude the construction of the £40 million east Fife regional road which effectively bypassed many towns and villages in central Fife.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the criteria his Department uses in determining whether a bypass should be built.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Many factors are used in determining the need for a bypass and the relative priority of these varies depending on local circumstances. Criteria include: traffic flow and composition such as the percentages of heavy goods vehicles and the proportion of through traffic; safety considerations for vehicles and pedestrians; environmental factors such as noise benefits to residential or commercial properties; the feasibility and economic viability of a bypass route; and the relationship to local and national development plans and transport strategy.

Bankruptcies

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each year for which figures are available the names of the 20 trustees in Scotland who received the largest aggregate total sum for work carried out under the Bankruptcy (Scotland) Act 1985 and for each of the top 20 the sum received in each year; if he will state in respect of each year, for cases where the final outcome is known, the fees paid to trustees in sequestrations which have exceeded 50 per cent. of the total debt; in how many cases the block fee system was (a) applied or (b) disapplied in each year; and in how many cases each year since 1985 there has been any dividend paid to unsecured ordinary creditors.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 11 February 1992]: (i) The 20 insolvency practitioners who received the largest aggregate payments and the amounts paid are shown in the table:

(ii) In those cases where the final outcome is known, payments to trustees have exceeded 50 per cent. of the total debt in the following number of cases:

Year	Number of Cases
1986	None
1987	None
1988	None
1989	3
1990	31

(iii) The block fee system of remuneration for trustees was introduced on 1 October 1990 and applied only to awards of sequestration made on or after that date ie where the first accounting period ended on or after 1 April 1991. In the period 1 October 1990 to 30 September 1991 there were 6,965 awards of sequestration. Of these, in 175 cases the trustee was elected and the provisions of the block fees scheme did not therefore apply and in a further 174 cases the block fee was disapplied. In the balance of 6,616 cases the trustees were remunerated under the block fee arrangement.

(iv) In sequestration under the Bankruptcy (Scotland) Act 1985 dividends were paid to ordinary creditors as follows:

1985	Not applicable
1986	None
1987	None
1988	None
1989	4
1990	11

1989	2,344
1990	4,364

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each year since 1989 the names of the 10 trustees who were most frequently appointed in sequestrations, and for each year the number of cases to which each was appointed.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 11 February 1992]: Following the coming into effect on 1 April 1986 of the provisions of the Bankruptcy (Scotland) Act 1985 the staffing levels and administration costs of the office of the accountant in bankruptcy have been as follows:

	Average number of staff	Administration costs (£)
1986-87	6	73,000
1987-88	9	94,000
1988-89	15	221,000
1989-90	26	400,000
1990-91	38	730,000

Further and Higher Education

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what comparative data he has on participation rates of young people in further and higher education including (a) numbers achieving higher education entry qualifications, (b) numbers entering higher education, (c) numbers entering higher and further education, (d) numbers with no qualifications when leaving school and (e) numbers entering work with no training, in Scotland and other EC and OECD nations.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 18 February 1992]: I shall write to the hon. Member. A copy of my reply will be placed in the House Library.

Health Service Staff

Mr. Doran: To asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what was the number of nursing and midwifery staff, including temporary agency staff, in the health service in Scotland on 1 January 1986; and what was the corresponding figure on 1 September 1991;

(2) what was the number of administrative and clerical staff in the health service in Scotland on 1 January 1986; and what was the corresponding figure for 1 September 1991.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 13 February 1992]: This information is not available centrally in the form requested.

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the number of staff graded as general or senior managers in the health service in Scotland on 1 January 1986; and what was the corresponding number on 1 September 1991.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 13 February 1992]: As at 1 January 1986, the term "general manager" was applied only to the most senior officer in each health board. Since that date it has been extended to other management posts. The term "senior manager" has been progressively introduced into the NHS in Scotland from 22 December 1987 when new arrangements for the remuneration and conditions of service of persons employed in a range of senior management posts came into operation.

Nurses

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has in respect of each health board in Scotland regarding (a) the number of enrolled nurses currently employed by the health board and (b) the number of enrolled nurses who are currently engaged in an enrolled nurse conversion or bridging course.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 17 February 1992]: As at 30 September 1991, the latest date for which figures are available, the number of enrolled nurses employed by health boards is set out in table 1.

Table 1
Number of enrolled nurses (whole-time equivalents)

	Number
Argyll and Clyde	636·8
Ayrshire and Arran	355·8
Borders	140·4

	Number
Dumfries and Galloway	217·0
Fife	684·7
Forth Valley	385·2

Lothian	1,000·7

Shetland	54·1
Tayside	981·7
Western Isles	37·5
Scotland	8,555·8

Information by health board on the number of enrolled nurses currently engaged on an enrolled nurse conversion or bridging course is not held centrally. The numbers of enrolled nurses on bridging courses in each college of nursing and midwifery at 30 September 1991 is, however, given in table 2 below.

Table 2

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will order a public inquiry into the proposals of Scottish Nuclear to erect storage facilities for waste nuclear fuel at Torness and Hunterston.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 17 February 1992]: Scottish Nuclear Ltd. would require the consent of the Secretary of State in terms of the Electricity Act 1989 to build a dry store for spent advanced gas-cooled reactor fuel. No such application for consent has yet been made to the Secretary of State. The 1989 Act provides for a public inquiry to be held to consider unresolved objections to any application made in terms of section 36 of that Act.

Lothian Health Board

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consultations have been held with the officials and members of Lothian health board to discuss their latest management proposals; and if he will make a statement outlining the Government's view of the proposals.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 19 February 1992]: Officials of the management executive of the national health service in Scotland are aware that Lothian health board is considering possible changes to the structure of the units of the board and I would expect the board to notify the management executive of its proposals before a final decision is taken. Changes in unit management arrangements are a matter for the board itself.

Employment Initiatives

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what initiatives are being taken to improve employment prospects in Argyll and Bute; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 20 February 1992]: Argyll and the Islands Enterprise is currently preparing its business plan for 1992-93. It has created some 275 new jobs in their area during the current financial year and I am confident that they will continue to give high priority to employment prospects.

Written Answers to Questions

Monday 24 February 1992

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Repossession Orders

Mr. Cox: To ask the Attorney-General how many repossession orders in favour of building societies or other lending institutions were made by Wandsworth county court in 1979, 1990 and 1991.

The Attorney-General: The 1979 figures are not available. The total number of mortgage possession actions entered, suspended orders and orders made during 1990 and 1991, in each county court in England and Wales, is contained in two lists which have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses of Parliament. These figures do not indicate how many houses have been repossessed through the courts as not all of the orders made will have resulted in the issue and execution of warrants of possession. At this stage, the 1991 figures are provisional and therefore liable to revision in the future.

TRANSPORT

Vehicle Test Certificates

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will supply the figures of the numbers of Ministry of Transport test certificates for both heavy goods vehicles and public service vehicles that have been reported stolen over the last five years from heavy goods vehicle and private vehicle testing stations.

Mr. Chope: The numbers of heavy goods and public service vehicle testing certificates reported as stolen in each of the last five years are as follows:

	HGV test certificates
Year	Motor vehicle test certificates	Trailer test certificates	PSV test certificates
1987	3,499	1,189	1,077
1988	111	48	0
1989	0	0	0
1990	0	0	250
1991	1,160	1,005	505
Total	4,770	2,242	1,832

Black Cabs

Mr. Bendall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the steps that are taken to ensure the fitness of applicants for black cab licences in London; what action he is considering to tighten the scrutiny procedure; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: On my behalf, the Public Carriage Office of the Metropolitan police already carries out stringent checks on the suitability of applicants for taxi drivers' licences in London, including a criminal record check. It also carries out further checks on each driver every three years when his or her licence is due to be renewed. It is difficult to know what effective additional checks might reasonably be carried out.

I am satisfied that the present procedures do ensure, as far as possible, that licensed cab drivers are suitable for the task they undertake, although no such system can give a 100 per cent. guarantee.

There is at present no regime for the licensing of minicabs or minicab drivers in London. I have commissioned a working party to make recommendations on the framework needed to ensure that users of taxis and minicabs in London can travel in reasonable safety and security.

Pollution, Bristol Channel

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the progress of measures to reduce pollution of the Bristol channel by the dumping of refuse or the pumping out of bilges by vessels in transit.

Mr. McLoughlin: Standards for the discharge of oil and garbage from ships are set by international convention and implemented by domestic legislation which applies to all ships in United Kingdom waters. The Department's marine surveyors monitor compliance with the regulations as part of their responsibilities when they go on board ships to undertake port state control inspections. In addition the marine pollution control unit's surveillance aircraft regularly overfly all United Kingdom waters, including the Bristol channel, to check for infringements which may also be reported by ships in the area.

The Department recently completed research into the shore provision of reception facilities for oil and garbage. Although the report of the findings is still being considered, indications are that such provision is adequate.

BR (Disabled People)

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answers to the hon. Member for Southport (Mr. Fearn) on 5 November 1991, Official Report, columns 23-24 on British Rail's duties in respect of access to its services by disabled people, whether British Rail is permitted to make arrangements to exclude wheelchair accessible taxis from Eltham station.

Mr. Freeman: It is for the courts to interpret the law. My advice is, however, that what British Rail is alleged to be doing at Eltham station is not contrary to the London Cab and Stage Carriage Act 1907. I am, however, disturbed to learn that its effect may be to reduce the transport opportunities open to disabled people, and I am writing to the chairman of British Rail about it.

Rail Investment

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give the percentage change in British Rail rail investment between (a) 1964 to 1970, (b) 1970 to 1974, (c) 1974 to 1979 and (d) 1979 to 1991-92; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The percentage changes in real terms for the given periods were as follows:

	Per cent.
1964-1970	−57
1970-1974	+48
1974-1979	+13
1979-1990-91	+55

The 1991-92 financial year is not yet complete, so no outturn figures is available.

Over-height Vehicles

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish, or give references to, the latest report into the problem of over-height road vehicles, or their loads, hitting bridges, overhead structures, or the roofs of tunnels; and what methods are currently in use or are being developed to deter or prevent their use of approaches to such obstructions.

Mr. Chope: The recommendations of a joint British Rail and Department of Transport working party were published in 1988 in a report, entitled "A Strategy for the Reduction of Bridge Bashing", published by HMSO.

The Department has made progress with implementing the working party's recommendations. Last month I announced proposals for increasing driver awareness of the height of the vehicle, and the award of contracts worth £1 million for warning systems at 15 high-risk low bridge sites. Other measures include better road signing and road improvements to increase the headroom at some low bridges.

Cradlewell Bypass

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the cost of the Transport and Road Research Laboratory pilot study of traffic origins and destinations prepared for the Cradlewell bypass project, Newcastle upon Tyne.

Mr. Chope: In autumn of 1991 the Transport and Road and Research Laboratory carried out the "before" part of a study to improve understanding of traveller responses to road improvements at a total cost of £109,000. This study forms part of a larger research project being undertaken by the Department of Transport.

Blind Spots

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the number of accidents due to blind spots involving lorries over 12 tonnes, first used before 1 October 1988, in each of the last three years.

Mr. Chope: The statistics requested are not available. It is almost impossible to prove that a blind spot was the cause of any particular road accident.

British Rail Leasing

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how a long-term finance lease by British Rail would be capitalised for public expenditure purposes.

Mr. Freeman: Leased assets will be capitalised for external financing limit—EFL—purposes in the same way as if they had been bought. The capitalisation of such leases follows standard accounting practices applying to all similar business undertakings whether in the private or public sector. Leasing is a form of borrowing, and the Government need to ensure that BR borrows according to its means; hence it is brought within the same EFL control as all other borrowing.

M42-A45 Junction

Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the progress of road improvements at the M42-A45 junction adjacent to the Birmingham exhibition centre.

Mr. Chope: Good progress is being made on a number of planned highway improvements at this junction. Statutory orders will soon be published for the construction of a new dedicated slip road from the M42 northbound to the A45 westbound. Design work is well underway on a scheme to improve access from the national exhibition centre to the M42 northbound. Work will also begin soon on a scheme to improve the roundabout itself.

An extra camera has been installed to improve television surveillance of traffic conditions at the junction and new motorway gantry signs will be erected later this year on the approaches to it. In the longer term the M42 is to be widened and consultants have been asked to investigate the options for improved access to the NEC and other facilities.

Rotherhithe Tunnel

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) when he expects continuous TV surveillance to be installed in Rotherhithe tunnel for traffic control;

(2) when he expects work to be put in hand to improve ventilation in the Rotherhithe tunnel.

Mr. Chope: Management of the Rotherhithe tunnel—including ventilation and TV surveillance—is a matter for the London boroughs of Tower Hamlets and Southwark. I understand that discussions are taking place on the need to install surveillance equipment in the tunnel, linked to the new east London traffic control centre.

Lorries

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has made representations to the European Community for lorries weighing over 12 tonnes, and used prior to 1 October 1988, to be obliged to be fitted with additional close proximity mirrors on their near-side, and, if the articulated type, also fitted with additional wide-angle mirrors.

Mr. Chope: The directive which requires the fitment of additional close proximity mirrors and, in some cases, additional wide-angled mirrors has applied to new lorries since 1 October 1988. The Government have not sought a retrospective requirement that vehicles manufactured before that date be fitted with such mirrors.

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will extend the MOT test to require all lorries over 12 tonnes to be fitted with additional close proximity mirrors on their near-side and, if articulated, to be fitted also with additional wide-angle mirrors.

Mr. Chope: No. It would not be reasonable to require vehicles manufactured before 1 October 1988 to be fitted in such a way in the absence of any proven road safety benefit.

Motor Vehicles

Mr. Fry: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will consider amending the construction and use regulations for motor vehicles to prohibit the use of fluorolastomel or veton.

Mr. Chope: As no danger arises from the use of fluorolastomel or veton in the normal course of construction or use of motor vehicles, there is no reason to amend construction and use regulations to prohibit these materials. There is only a risk from these materials if they have been subjected to high temperatures. For motor vehicles this is only likely to be a problem when scrapping burnt out vehicles. Health and safety inspectors are aware of the risks and give appropriate advice.

Rail Services

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what standby assets are specifically allocated for contingencies by British Rail InterCity, French and German railways;

(2) if he will issue a general directive to British Rail to seek to reduce InterCity train cancellations, even if this involves a lower utilisation of capital assets;

(3) if he will tabulate the cancellation records of British Rail InterCity and the French and German railways;

(4) if he will meet the chairman of British Rail to discuss the relationship between the improved financial results on InterCity and the increase in the number of InterCity train cancellations.

Mr. Freeman: As part of the quality of service objectives agreed between the Government and British Rail, InterCity already has an objective to operate 99·5 per cent. of its scheduled services. The actual performance achieved in recent years is as follows:

	Percentage of scheduled services
1987-88	99·5
1988-89	99·0
1989-90	98·0
1990-91	97·8

Not all cancellations are due to rolling stock problems. I understand that crew shortages, particularly in the south-east, have been a major factor in the recent decline in performance.

It is a management matter for BR to judge how much spare capacity is needed for maintenance and other contingencies. The Department does not hold information on this or on the performance of French and German railways in this area.

I have no reason to believe that there is any direct link between InterCity's financial performance and the rate of cancellations.

Publicity

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list all the television advertising campaigns and all other publicity campaigns costing over £100,000 to be carried out by his Department in February, March, April, May or June of the current year.

Mr. McLoughlin: My Department currently proposes to carry out a child road safety publicity campaign in April. Further road safety publicity campaigns in the period to June are under consideration.

Helmsdale Auxiliary Coastguard

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) why he proposes to reduce the Helmsdale auxiliary coastguard complement to seven; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what changes he proposes to make to the present roles of the Helmsdale auxiliary coastguard.

Mr. McLoughlin: The recently completed sector and auxiliary coastguard review defined the Coastguard's coastal commitments and reviewed the availability, readiness and training of coastguard personnel to meet current requirements. It concluded that the present day coastguard needs modern bases from which to operate. The present complement at the Helmsdale auxiliary coastguard station is 11 members. Their present roles will not change, and the premises currently occupied will not be released. Equipment utilised by the team is to remain unchanged, except that the Land Rover presently in use will be replaced by a modern 4WD Vauxhall Brava in March 1992. The complement will be reduced by four members initially, however a further two will be recruited in the Dunbeath area to the north in order to fulfil the initial response requirement between Helmsdale and Wick. It is anticipated that these changes will be implemented by the end of the financial year 1992-93.

A21

Mr. Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the road improvement schemes and their estimated time of completion that are being planned for the A21 trunk road.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 21 February 1992]: The road improvement schemes in the national programme for the A21 trunk road are as follows:

Tonbridge bypass to Pembury bypass
Kippings Cross to Lamberhurst improvement
Lamberhurst bypass
Lamberhurst to Flimwell improvement
Hurst Green bypass
Silver Hill improvement

These schemes are at varying stages of development. Their completion will depend on progress that can be made with the design, statutory and other procedures and the availability of funds.

In addition, there are a number of smaller scale works in the regional programme, mostly aimed at improving safety and traffic flow.

Leicester Eastern Bypass

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport in relation to the tender secured by Travis Morgan to act as advisers on the proposed route of the Leicester eastern bypass, if he will state the total number of companies who submitted unsuccessful tenders and, where possible, their names and addresses.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 21 February 1992]: Two companies submitted unsuccessful tenders. They were Sir Owen Williams and Partners, 41 Whitcomb street, London, WC2H 7DT; and Sir Alexander Gibb and Partners, Earley House, London road, Reading, Berkshire RG6 1BL.

National Parks

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what appraisal he has made of transport needs to and within each of the national parks.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 21 Feburary 1992]: My right hon. and learned Friend's responsibility is for the trunk road network, which forms a small proportion of the transport infrastructure serving national parks. The Government's policy remains as stated in the 1987 White Paper:

"In National Parks the Government is committed to ensuring that no new trunk routes will be constructed or an existing road upgraded unless there is a compelling need which cannot be met by any reasonable alternative means."

Policy for trunk roads in national parks in Wales is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Other transport needs are a matter for local authorities, passenger transport executives, and British Rail, in consultation with the national park authorities where appropriate.

CIVIL SERVICE

Civil Service (New Tasks)

42. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service what new tasks have been assumed by the civil service in the past year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: As departmental and agency reports show, the civil service is responding to a wide range of new tasks flexibly, effectively and efficiently. The question of functions and priorities is constantly under review.

Racial Discrimination

43. Mr. Hind: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service what measures he is taking to counteract racial discrimination in the civil service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: We continue to implement the servicewide programme for action on race, introduced in May 1990. There has been an increase in ethnic minority representation among staff. Copies of a recent report on progress have been placed in the Libraries of the House.

THE ARTS

Royal Academy

32. Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Minister for the Arts when he last visited the Royal Academy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: I visited the Royal Academy on 15 January when I formally opened the Andrea Mantegna exhibition and was a guest there at the Japan festival gala one month later. I have also again seen the Mantegna exhibition, and very splendid it was too. I am delighted to congratulate the Royal Academy on its magnificent and almost entirely self-sufficient work of refurbishment and pleased that the Government were able to contribute to the renovations via the museums and galleries improvement fund.

Natural History Museum

34. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister for the Arts what is (a) the current number of employees and (b) the current funding for the natural history museum.

Mr. Renton: There are currently 672 staff in post at the natural history museum. In 1991-92 the museum will receive £27·8 million grant-in-aid.

Libraries

35. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will meet the Association of London Authorities to discuss public library provision.

Mr. Renton: Yes. The association should first write to me outlining its points for discussion.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will meet representatives from the Association of District Councils to discuss library provision.

Mr. Renton: Yes. The association should first write to me outlining its points for discussion.

Welsh Arts Council

36. Mr. Hain: To ask the Minister for the Arts when he next intends to meet the chairman of the arts council for Wales to discuss funding.

Mr. Renton: I meet the chairman of the Welsh Arts Council from time to time to discuss matters of mutual interest. I met the chairman in May and October last year and look forward to meeting him again in the near future.

Museums and Galleries (Attendance)

37. Mr. Carrington: To ask the Minister for the Arts how many people visited the national museums and galleries in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Renton: I was delighted to see that it is estimated that more than 21 million people visited the 11 national museums and galleries for which I am responsible during 1991.

Galleries and Theatres (Regulations)

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister for the Arts what arrangements his Department has to assess the effect of proposed regulations affecting museums, art galleries and theatres prior to implementation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: The Office of Arts and Libraries carefully monitors the likely impact any proposed regulations might have on museums, art galleries and theatres before their implementation. The number of such regulations is, however, small.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Customs Checks

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he intends to review the number of routine checks by Customs officials at Scottish airports; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Routine checks by Customs officers are becoming less of a feature of customs work at all ports and airports as a result of that department's strategy of more flexible deployment of staff based on intelligence and assessment of risk and concentrating on drugs, obscene material, instruments of terrorism and other high priority smuggling targets.

The strategy is kept under constant review.

Customs (Honesty System)

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the honesty system employed by Customs and Excise at Cardiff airport.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The arrangements at Cardiff international airport are part of Customs' strategy to provide a more flexible deployment of staff according to intelligence and assessment of risk and targeted on the key areas of drugs, instruments of terrorism, pornography and so on. We aim to allow honest travellers the freest movement through our frontiers.

Customs will continue to monitor the effectiveness of the approach but it is too early to make an assessment.

Income Tax

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the cost of collecting income tax from Scottish-based taxpayers; and how this relates to the Inland Revenue's calculations of the late 1970s.

Mr. Maude: Information specific to taxpayers resident in Scotland is not available.

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give details of Scottish-based income tax which is collected via computer-based offices; and what assessment he has made of the extent to which computers make the collections easier and less costly to collect.

Mr. Maude: No information is available on total income tax collected in Scotland as opposed to the liabilities of those resident there. Computerisation projects are subject to rigorous investment appraisal before approval to proceed is given. In the 10 years to 1991 a reduction of 6,260 Inland Revenue staff is attributable to computerisation.

Uniform Business Rate

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from the Abergavenny chamber of trade concerning the uniform business rate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: I have received a letter.

Energy Efficiency

Ms. Walley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will consider introducing capital allowances for equipment installed as part of an energy efficiency drive.

Mr. Maude: I cannot anticipate my right hon. Friend's Budget statement.

Taxpayers

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the number of people paying tax in each year since 1978-79, giving the numbers on basic rate and higher rate tax.

Mr. Maude: Latest estimates are given in table 1.5 of "Inland Revenue Statistics 1991".

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the latest estimate of the number of taxpayers divided into basic rate and higher rate, and by sex, in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Maude: Estimates at 1991-92 levels of income are as follows:

	Number of taxpayers million
Basic rate men	14·2

Single Person's Allowance

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the cost in 1992-93 of an increase in the single person's tax allowance of (a) £50, (b) £100, (c) £150, (d) £200, (e) £250 and (f) £300, giving the numbers taken out of tax in each case, in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Maude: Estimates are given in the table.

Increase in personal allowance[1] £	Exchequer cost in 1992-93[2] £ million	Exchequer cost in full year[2] £ million	Numbers taken out of tax thousands
50	260	330	100
100	510	650	190
150	770	970	300
200	1,020	1,300	400
250	1,270	1,620	480
300	1,520	1,940	570

[1] Including the personal allowances for the over-65s and over-75s.

[2] Over and above statutory indexation.

Married Couples Allowance

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the effect on revenues in 1992-93 of freezing the married couples allowance instead of index-linking it.

Mr. Maude: A yield of about £180 million in the first year and £230 million in a full year.

Civil Service Relocation

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what further plans he has to relocate civil service staff to the regions; what performance assessment he has made of the civil servants in the north-west; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave on 4 December 1991, Official Report, columns 163-64, to my hon. Friend the Member for Ealing, North (Mr. Greenway). Under the Government's relocation policy, it is for Departments and agencies to review the location of their work regularly and systematically, with the intention of finding sites offering better value for money. Departmental Ministers will announce their own decisions on significant relocations on completion of the essential processes of assessment and consultation.

Performance assessments of civil servants are made by their line managers within the department or agency in which they work. These assessments are neither collected nor analysed on a regional basis.

Civil Servants

Mr. Carrington: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress is being made to reduce the number of civil servants.

Mr. Maples: I refer my hon. Friend to table 4.13 of the "Statistical Supplement to the 1991 Autumn Statement", Cm. 1920, presented to the House last month, which shows that civil service manpower fell by 171,000 between 1978-79 and 1991-92.

Civil Servants (Scotland)

Mr. Strang: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many civil servants from Departments and agencies other than the Scottish Office are based in Scotland.

Mr. Maples: I would refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Garscadden (Mr. Dewar) on 21 February 1992, at columns 308-10.

Competitive Tendering

Mr. Steen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what arrangements his Department has to assess proposals for regulations on competitive tendering and their effect on existing small firms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: My Department well appreciates the effects of changes of policy on small firms. When assessing proposals for regulations on competitive tendering, full consideration is given to the impact upon small firms. My Department consults the Department of Employment, which has responsibility for Government policy on small firms. Minimising the costs of regulation for business is an important part of the Government's programme to create the conditions to promote prosperity.

Training

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received in favour of treating training as an investment qualifying for an investment allowance against corporation tax.

Mr. Maude: I have not received any such representations.

Earnings

Mr. Richard Shepherd: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of taxpayers earned over £55,000 a year gross in each of the past five tax years.

Mr. Maude: Estimates are readily available for both 1990-91 and 1991-92. About three quarters of 1 per cent. and just under 1 per cent. of taxpayers respectively are estimated to have gross earnings from employment and self-employment of over £55,000 in these years.

Taxes

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list those taxes which have to be renewed annually by resolution of the House.

Mr. Maude: Income tax and corporation tax.

Fiscal Drag

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the latest estimate of the amount of revenue that would accrue to the Government from fiscal drag if the tax system were simply indexed in the 1992 Budget, in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Maude: The amount of real fiscal drag that accrues to the Government in any one year depends on the rate of growth of the economy and on the composition of demand. But on average over a cycle it might be expected to raise the ratio of tax receipts to GDP by about 0·2 percentage points per year.

Disabled Taxpayers

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what, in the latest year for which information is available, is the total number of people in receipt of a disability benefit who pay income tax; and how many pay VAT.

Mr. Maude: The latest estimates for 1991-92 of the numbers of people in receipt of a disability benefit who pay income tax are as follows:

	Thousands
Invalidity benefit	220
Severe disablement allowance	20

These estimates are based on Department of Social Security estimates of the total numbers in receipt of each benefit and information on taxpayers derived from the results of the 1990 family expenditure survey. The figures are, therefore, provisional. VAT is chargeable on a wide range of consumer expenditure and it seems likely that everybody has to pay some during the course of a year.

Tax Inspectors

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the latest estimate of the amount of revenue brought in by each tax inspector in a year; and what is their average salary.

Mr. Maude: In the year to 31 March 1991 the average yield of inspectors of taxes in local offices involved in counter evasion and avoidance and technical review work was £700,000. A figure for average salary is not available, but the average overall cost of such an inspector was £32,000.

Business Expansion Scheme

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was for each year of the years of the existance of the business expansion scheme, the total amount invested in BES, the total cost to the Exchequer, and the percentage and amount of BES money invested, and associated cost to the Exchequer, in residential and assured tenancy schemes.

Mr. Maude: The business expansion scheme was extended to include investment in private rented housing in 1988-89. The latest estimates are as follows:

	Amounts invested			Cost of income tax relief
	Total	of which investment in private rented housing		Total	of which in respect of investment in private rented housing
	£ million	amount £ million	percentage	£ million	£ million

Information is not yet available for 1991-92.

Taxation

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will bring up to date his answer of 25 November 1983, Official Report, columns 316-17 showing the proportion of taxation levied on capital, labour and other.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 19 February 1992]: In the table, taxes on capital include corporation tax, North sea taxes and royalties, income tax on rent, dividends, interest and so on, capital gains tax, inheritance tax, development land tax, and national non-domestic rates. Taxes on labour include income tax on earned and self-employment income—including pensions and benefits to the unemployed—and employer's and employees' national insurance contributions. Other taxes—mainly taxes on expenditure and community charge—are not allocated.

On this basis the figures for 1990-91 are as follows:

Capital	Labour	Other	Percent Total
19·4	44·0	36·6	100·0

Mortgage Tax Relief

Mr. Battle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of people receiving mortgage tax relief are first-time buyers.

Mr Maude [holding answer 21 February 1992]: Information on the proportion of all those receiving mortgage tax relief who were first-time buyers when the mortgage was taken out is not available. Almost 50 per cent. of those mortgages taken out in the year ending September 1991 were for first-time buyers.

Invalidity Benefit

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer under what conditions and at what rate he expects to initiate the taxation of invalidity benefit; if he proposes at the same time to review the taxation liability of the invalidity benefit supplement to the retirement pension; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 21 February 1992]: It remains the Government's intention to bring invalidity benefit into taxation when operationally possible. When taxation is introduced the benefit will form part of the recipient's taxable income and will therefore be taxed at the taxpayer's marginal rate. The Government have no intention of changing the tax treatment of the addition to retirement pension given to those previously entitled to the invalidity allowance.

Alcohol Duty

Dr. Marek: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his policy relating to European Community legislation with regard to duty on (a) vin doux naturel and (b) vin de liqueur compared with still table wine.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 20 February 1992]: The UK excise duty bands of wines and made-wines are based solely on alcoholic content. These constitute neutral and objective demarcations between alcoholic drinks of different strengths. I see no reason to make any fiscal distinction between fermented and distilled alcohol and will seek to retain our existing arrangements in future EC negotiations.

Royal Mint

Dr. Marek: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the members of the board of the Royal Mint, together with the ranges of pay applicable to their position and any appropriate qualifications.

Mr. Maples [holding answer 20 February 1992]: The members of the management board of the Royal Mint, their current ranges of pay, including performance-related pay, and appropriate qualifications are:

Member and Relevant Qualification	Pay Range £
Mr. A. D. Garrett MA Deputy Master and Comptroller (Chief Executive)	up to [1]66,000
Mr. D. C. Snell FCMA MBCS Director of Finance and Corporate Services (Deputy Chief Executive)	[2]42,724 to 47,921

[1] Including special performance-related bonus.
[2] Excluding bonuses payable under the Mint's profit-sharing scheme.
[3] Including London weighting.
[4] Fee paid.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Lockerbie Disaster

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make contact with Mr. Mazn Abu Shriff about responsibility for the Lockerbie air disaster; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. I refer my hon. Friend to the statement made by the Foreign Secretary on 14 November. A thorough three-year investigation into the Lockerbie disaster by the Dumfries and Galloway police revealed no evidence to suggest that any other countries or groups were behind the attack on Pan Am 103.

Publicity

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list all the television advertising campaigns and all other publicity campaigns costing over £100,000 to be carried out by his Department in February, March, April, May or June of the current year.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office is continuing its campaign of consular publicity. For the period in question new versions have been commissioned of films on drug smuggling and holiday medical insurance, made for free showing on TV as public service announcements and aimed at viewers planning holidays overseas. The cost of producing the films will be around £160,000.

Spanish customs Officers

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Spanish Government on the problems likely to be encountered by Scottish fish processors as a result of industrial action by Spanish customs officers.

Mr. Garel-Jones: I have had no discussions with the Spanish Government about the industrial action by Spanish customs agents. The embassy in Madrid is monitoring the situation.

WALES

Publicity

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list all the television advertising campaigns and all other publicity campaigns costing over £100,000 to be carried out by his Department in February, March, April, May or June of the current year.

Mr. David Hunt: The Welsh Office does not plan to run any television campaigns. At present the Department plans to run the following three publicity campaigns:—

Education—including teacher shortage
Industry—including Enterprise Wales
Road Safety.

PRIME MINISTER

Lockerbie

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will raise with President Bush the circumstances of involvement of non-Libyans in the Lockerbie bombing.

The Prime Minister: We remain in close contact with the United States over the Lockerbie bombing. We and the United States authorities share the view that there is no evidence to suggest that any countries other than Libya were responsible for the Lockerbie bombing.

HEALTH

Ministerial Engagements

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) hospitals and (b) clinics in the Greater Manchester area he has visited in the last year.

Mr. Waldegrave: My Ministers and I regularly visit hospitals and clinics in the course of our official duties and I last visited hospitals and clinics in the Greater Manchester area on Tuesday 12 March 1991.

Cataract Operations

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what advice he issues to regional health authorities about adding cataract patients to the waiting list when it may be many months from diagnosis to preparedness for an operation for medical reasons.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Guidance on the management of waiting lists, issued by the Royal College of Surgeons in July 1991, states that patients should only be placed on a waiting list when they are clinically ready to undergo surgery. This advice is reiterated in departmental guidance which was issued to all health authorities at the same time.

Procurement

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what arrangements his Department has to assess the effect of proposed regulations made by his Department affecting companies involved in the procurement process; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: Where regulations are planned which are likely to impact on the business sector a compliance cost assessment is prepared wherever possible in order to provide an indicative guide to costs and other effects. The Department seeks wherever possible to reduce the burden of regulations or other Government procedures on the business sector.

Dentists

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has evaluated the effect on national health service patients of any changes to dentists' fee structures; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The health departments have been consulting dentists' representatives on dental remuneration. The health departments and the general dental services committee have now agreed to re-examine the detailed elements of the levels of fees. They will simultaneously begin a more fundamental review of the dental remuneration system, as recommended by the doctors and dentists review body.

Publicity

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list all the television advertising campaigns and all other publicity campaigns costing over £100,000 to be carried out by his Department in February, March, April, May or June of the current year.

Mr. Dorrell: Television advertising campaigns during February are:

Solvents Misuse
Nursing Regional

Other planned publicity campaigns likely to cost over £100,000 from February to June are:

Food Safety
Blood Donor Recruitment
Health Advice for Travellers
Nursing
AIDS
Drugs Misuse
Back to Sleep
Help with NHS Treatment Costs

Individual campaign allocations from April 1992 have yet to be confirmed.

Local Government Electors

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish a table to show for England the number of local government electors on each of the 1985 to 1990 electoral registers, together with the estimated resident population for the mid point of each preceding year, including those aged 17 years and over, and 63 per cent. of those aged 16 years.

Mr. Dorrell: Numbers of local government electors on the 1985 to 1990 registers have been published in annual volumes of "Electoral Statistics"—series EL nos. 13 to 17— copies of which are available in the Library. I have arranged for the requested resident population estimates to be prepared and sent to the hon. Member, and a copy will then be placed in the Library.

Parkside Health Authority

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will begin a review into the adequacy of hospital services in Parkside health authority.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 11 February 1992]: We are satisfied that Parkside health authority is fulfilling its statutory duty to provide a comprehensive health service for its residents, within the resources available. We do not intend to institute an inquiry.

EMPLOYMENT

Small Businesses

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what arrangements his Department has to assess the effect of proposed new regulations affecting small firms and enterprises; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: In line with the deregulation initiative and in common with other Government Departments, all regulations proposed or approved by my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Employment are assessed for their impact on business. Details of these assessments are provided to the deregulation unit in the DTI and are publicly available. Because of my responsibilities for small firms, I take a keen interest in the impact on small firms of regulations proposed by other Government Departments.

Job Discrimination

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has made to those companies who impose an age limit of 50 years on job applicants to ensure people above this age group do not suffer discrimination.

Mr. Forth: The Department regularly urges employers to give proper recognition to the qualities that older workers possess. They should abandon arbitrary age limits in recruitment and treat everyone on their merits. To assist this process, my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Employment announced on 11 February that we propose to set up an advisory group on older workers. The group will have an important role to play in the identification and dissemination of good practice in the employment of older people.

Wages Councils

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will update his answer to the hon. Member for Coventry, South-East, Official Report, 22 April 1991, column 366, concerning wages councils.

Mr. Forth: The information requested is not yet available but will be available during March.

Publicity

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list all the television advertising campaigns and all other publicity campaigns costing over £100,000 to be carried out by his Department in February, March, April, May or June of the current year.

Mr. Forth: No television advertising campaigns are planned by the Department between February and June this year. Other publicity campaigns costing more than £100,000 planned for this period are jobclubs, national training awards, high technology national training, employment action, and learning technologies.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Commonwealth of Independent States

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessments have been carried out of the impact of food aid on markets for locally produced food, on the development of the marketing system and on the prices that farmers receive in the Commonwealth of Independent States.

Mrs. Chalker: EC food aid is being sold through free market mechanisms so as to bolster the development of a market infrastructure which will greatly assist the development of distribution systems and thus benefit local producers. No formal assessment has yet been carried out of the impact of this on emerging markets, as the process of providing food aid on a large scale is as yet in its infancy, and time is needed to assess its full effect.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the total level of counterpart funds raised from the sale of food aid from all western donors in the Commonwealth of Independent States; and what mechanisms exist within the Overseas Development Administration, the EC and other bodies to monitor the use of these counterpart funds.

Mrs. Chalker: Unofficial estimates suggest that over 400 million roubles may be generated by the sale of food so far delivered under the European Community's 200 mecu (£140 million) food aid package for Moscow, St. Petersburg and other cities. These counterpart funds will be used to provide direct aid for needy groups such as families and pensioners—an approach which we endorse. The fund will be monitored by the Community task force which currently oversees the entire food aid operation. We are pleased to see that more staff have been made available to the European Commission in this area.

Turks and Caicos Islands

Mr. Fishburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are his plans for assistance to the Government of the Turks and Caicos Islands.

Mrs. Chalker: Discussions on future assistance were held between the Government and the Turks and Caicos Islands—TCI—Government on 13 and 14 February.

Her Majesty's Government have agreed to provide nearly £24 million to the TCI Government over the three financial years beginning in 1992-93.

Of this, £18 million in bilateral funds and £1 million in regional funds will be used in support of projects agreed between the two governments in accoreance with the TCI Government's "Progress through Partnership" policy. It is anticipated that a further £4 million will be forthcoming over the same period for activities in support of the basic functions of government. Funds will also be used to clear part of the debt of the TCI Government inherited during the winding up of the national airline.

This is the largest aid package the United Kingdom has provided to TCI and is designed to assist the TCI Government in their policy of moving rapidly towards economic self-sufficiency.

Her Majesty's Government have agreed to further talks with the TCI over the next few years to monitor the progress of this aid in meeting the objective of economic self-sufficiency.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Education, Suffolk

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what extra money has been given to Suffolk county council to cover the teachers' salary award for 1992-93; and what advice he has given to the authority on how to meet the gap between its budget and its teachers' pay bill;

(2) if he will make a statement on the estimates he made of pupil numbers and teachers required for Suffolk county council for 1992-93; and how he expects those estimates to be altered following the teachers' salary settlement for 1992-93.

Mr. Fallon: The Government are paying additional grant to authorities in England of £56·5 million to help them cover the cost of the increase in teachers' pay recommended by the school teachers review body. Suffolk's share will be some £677,000. The Government's view is that with this additional support LEAs should have adequate headroom within the 1992-93 local authority finance settlement to cover the cost of the teachers' award in full, provided that they exploit their scope for making efficiency savings. It is for individual local authorities and schools with delegated budgets to determine spending priorities, including the number of teachers to be employed. In determining education's share of the overall 1992-93 settlement, the Government took account of the expected growth in pupil numbers nationally; and individual authorities' shares reflect the latest information available about the distribution of school pupils between authorities.

Palaeontology

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has had from geologists at the British Geological Survey about funding for palaeontology in Edinburgh.

Mr. Alan Howarth: My right hon. and learned Friend has received no such representations.

Ice Skating

Mr. Denis Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what discussions he has held with the National Skating Association regarding the need to replace the first-class coaching facilities lost to skating by the closure of the Richmond ice rink; and what proposals he has to ensure the future level of national and international skating skills in this country;

(2) what steps he has taken to assess the effects of the closure of the Richmond ice rink upon the development of the sport of ice skating in the United Kingdom and the training of future international competitors; also upon the public of the loss of these facilities for recreational use; and what steps he is taking to safeguard these interests.

Ms. Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what discussions have been held with the London borough of Richmond to plan a replacement of ice skating facilities in that area.

Mr. Atkins: Despite the closure of Richmond ice rink I understand that training facilities are available elsewhere. I welcome, however, the feasibility study, by a subsidiary of the National Skating Association and funded by the Foundation for Sport and the Arts, into a proposed national ice training centre.

Discussions are still taking place between the London borough of Richmond and the London Edinburgh Trust which owns the former ice rink, concerning an alternative site for an ice rink in the borough. It is for the National Skating Association to consult with the London borough of Richmond and others as appropriate, and I have not, therefore, held discussions with either body.

Argentina Animal Health Authority

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement about any agreement between the Agricultural and Food Research Council's institute of animal health and the animal health authority of Argentina including the costs involved.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The Pirbright laboratory of the AFRC institute for animal health—IAH—has agreed in principle to undertake a collaborative programme of research with the Centro de Investigacion en Ciencias Veterinarias—CICV—of Argentina's Instituto de Virologia del Instituto Nacional de Tecnologia Agropecuaria subject to agreement of suitable funding arrangements. The research will investigate the role of carrier animals in the epidemiology of foot and mouth disease, for which Pirbright is the European and world reference laboratory. The Argentine Government are considering whether to support the project. The CICV and IAH are also seeking support from the Commission of the European Communities as part of its scheme to promote bilateral scientific co-operation between laboratories in the Community and countries in Latin America, Asia and the Mediterranean.

Stratford School

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when Her Majesty's inspectors last visited Stratford school; and if the report was published.

Mr. Eggar: Two HMIs paid a routine visit to Stratford school on 4 December 1991. As with all such visits, there will be no published report.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much financial support he has given to Stratford school in the past 12 months.

Mr. Eggar: The annual maintenance grant for the financial year 1991-92 is some £1·5 million. In the last 12 months we have paid further sums amounting to some £100,000 for capital and special purposes.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the current pupil roll at Stratford school; and what proportion are resident in the borough of Newham.

Mr. Eggar: I understand that there are currently 570 pupils on roll at the school, of whom fewer than 2 per cent. are resident outside Newham.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what action he intends to take in respect of Stratford school.

Mr. Eggar: We shall continue to monitor the situation at the school and make further use of our powers to act when appropriate.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what action he has taken to date to deal with the current difficulties at Stratford school; and what has been the effect.

Mr. Eggar: My Department has communicated with the school on a range of matters. My right hon. and learned Friend has used his powers to intervene to ensure the reinstatement of the headteacher. He has also appointed Mrs. Daphne Gould and Mr. Eric Bolton as additional governors to the school. We have made it clear that we are keeping in close touch with the situation and we will not hesitate to use our powers further in the interests of the education of the pupils at the school.

PE Teachers

Ms. Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many qualified physical education teachers left training colleges in each of the last five years; and what is his Department's estimate for the number still in teaching.

Mr. Fallon: The table shows the numbers of students specialising in PE who successfully completed an initial teacher training course in England and Wales, in each year from 1985 to 1989, together with the number of these who were teaching in the maintained nursery, primary and secondary schools sector in England and Wales on 31 March 1990.

	ITT completers with main subject PE	Of whom: teaching on 31 March 1990
1985	654	369
1986	781	466
1987	661	428
1988	687	454
1989	571	394
Total	3,354	2,111

The remainder includes those who have not taught since qualifying or have left teaching, as well as those who are teaching in other sectors such as independent schools, or teaching outside England and Wales.

Sports Grounds

Ms. Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what response he has made to the report by the Institution of Structural Engineers "Appraisal of Sports Grounds", a copy of which has been sent to him; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: I received the institution's report with interest. I understand that it has been warmly welcomed by the Home Office, within whose responsibility sports ground safety falls, and whose "Guide to Safety at Sports Grounds" it complements.

Sensory Impairments

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what criteria were used in determining the outcome of Liverpool education authority's bid for funds to develop provision for children with dual sensory impairmants; how many bids from the north-west were successful; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fallon: Bids under the grants for education support and training programme to encourage the development of regional provision for deaf-blind children were assessed against the criteria set out in the Department's published guidance. Bids were to be made on a regional basis, with at least three local education authorities per bid unless geographical constraints made this impossible in practice. The successful bids were those thought most likely to secure lasting benefits both locally and nationally. Geographical representation was not a selection criterion, and none of the successful bids involved authorities in the north-west.

GCSE Coursework

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many letters he has received on the subject of GCSE coursework; and how many of these have supported his proposed changes in the extent of coursework.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend has received a large volume of correspondence on this subject. The correspondents have expressed a range of views.

Publicity

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list all the television advertising campaigns and all other publicity campaigns costing over £100,000 to be carried out by his Department in February, March, April, May or June of the current year.

Mr. Eggar: Publicity campaigns costing over £100,000 cover the following areas:

A touring exhibition, "Time for School", which was launched in January will continue during February and March.

A campaign of information for companies about tax relief on business gifts and charitable giving to educational institutions—February/April.

Information for parents about the National Curriculum —February/March.

Information for parents about testing at age 7 and 14—May/June.

In addition, the professional, industrial and commercial updating programme will continue to support and encourage colleges, polytechnics and universities to improve and increase their provision to meet the training needs of employers and their employees.

No television campaigns are planned for these months.

Mr. David Mogie

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to pay Mr. David Mogie, a student at Sunderland polytechnic, his bursary of £1,500; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fallon: A cheque for the first instalment of the bursary was dispatched from this Department to Sunderland polytechnic on 29 January. The second instalment of £750 will be paid in April.

A-levels

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has on the drop-out rate from A-level courses in England and Wales each year from 1985.

Mr. Eggar: Comprehensive information on A-level drop-out rates is not readily available. However, estimates of the percentage of 16-year-olds commencing A or AS level courses at schools in England who were no longer pursuing those courses a year later are as follows:

Academic year of commencement of A/AS level course	Percentage no longer pursuing course one year later Per cent.
1984-85	13·6
1985-86	13·3
1986-87	13·5
1987-88	12·7
1988-89	12·9
1989-90	12·4

Seven-year-olds (Tests)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish a table of local education authorities whose attainment test results at seven years were published showing in each case (a) those who included all seven-year-olds in the tests, (b) those who excluded special needs pupils, (c) those who excluded statemented or excluded pupils, (d) those who excluded pupils with a mother tongue other than English, (e) those who excluded other categories of pupil with an indication of which other category was so excluded and (f) those who made no return of which categories of pupil were excluded.

Mr. Eggar: With the exception of pupils with statements of special educational needs, and some others temporarily excepted from the provisions of the national curriculum under section 19 of the Education Reform Act, all pupils coming to the end of key stage 1 of the national curriculum were required to be tested in the core subjects last summer.

Some LEAs and schools chose to include pupils with statements of special educational needs in the tests. The reply which I gave to the hon. Member for the City of Durham (Mr. Steinberg) on 10 February, Official Report, column 374, explains how the LEA results published on 19 December treated such pupils.

National Curriculum Council

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what financial arrangements were made for the former chairman and chief executive of the National Curriculum Council upon his departure from office last year.

Mr. Eggar: Mr. Duncan Graham received financial compensation of just over £100,000 in respect of loss of income and pension benefits on the early termination of his contract of employment.

Pupil Placements

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many children attend city technology colleges, grant-maintained schools and grammar schools and use the assisted places scheme.

Mr. Eggar [pursuant to his reply, 10 February 1992, c. 373-74]: Latest estimates suggest that more than 105,000 pupils now attend grant-maintained schools in England, and that this is expected to rise to some 160,000 next term. Nearly 8,000 pupils are in city technology colleges and in excess of 27,4000 pupils receive support under the assisted places scheme.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Fairs and Promotions

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the cost of the review of the fairs and promotions branch of his Department being carried out by Price Waterhouse.

Mr. Sainsbury: Price Waterhouse is not carrying out a review of my Department's fairs and promotions branch.

Life Cycle Analysis

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what advice and assistance his Department offers companies to introduce life cycle analysis in product planning and development.

Mr. Leigh: Life cycle analysis—LCA—is a system for assessing the environmental impact of products at all stages of their life from the winning of raw materials through to the eventual disposal of the product. Although the methodology for assessing these impacts is still developing, many individual companies are turning to LCA to assist them in understanding where the main environmental impacts of their products occur. My officials actively encourage companies in this direction.

My Department has been involved in a number of presentations to business audiences to explain the relationship between LCA and the setting up of an EC-wide official ecolabelling scheme for consumer products. This official scheme will use a "cradle to grave" analysis as the underpinning requirement for assessing the environmental criteria to be applied to products which may attract a label.

RENAVAL

Sir Robin Maxwell-Hyslop: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how his statement to the House on 17 February, Official Report, column 27, about agreement with European Commissioner Bruce Millan affects the RENAVAL programme in Plymouth, and other Devon county council programmes dependent on EEC part-funding including RECHAR.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 21 February 1992]: I expect the RENAVAL programme now to proceed satisfactorily. Devon is not eligible for RECHAR grants, which are for coalfield areas.

Export Controls

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when his Department next plans to hold seminars on changes to United Kingdom export controls to prevent proliferation; and if he will make a statement on the outcome of the export control seminars his Department sponsored for industry in 1991.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 21 February 1992]: Five DTI non-proliferation seminars are planned for this year, the first in Manchester on 23 March.

The seminars held last year were well received by industry. I am satisfied that they made a valuable contribution to highlighting awareness about the risks of clandestine procurement activities and explaining export controls.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Criminal Records

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received regarding the production in court of the offender's previous criminal record.

Mr. John Patten: We receive representations from time to time on this subject, about which my hon. Friend wrote to my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary on 4 February.

Marriages of Convenience

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when his Department was last notified by the Registrar General that a proposed marriage was purely one of convenience.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: On Wednesday 29 January 1992.

Police (Body Armour)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 30 January, Official Report, column 647, what is the cost to public funds in providing body armour for police forces.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information is not available centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Police, Hampshire

Mr. Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the figures for Hampshire police establishment (a) police operational duties and (b) civilian staff; and what were the figures in 1979.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The present establishment of the Hampshire Constabulary is 3,202 compared to 2,954 in 1979. The establishment will increase to 3,269 from April 1992. It is for the chief constable to decide how available manpower should be deployed. At the end of 1990, 84 per cent. of the force was deployed to operational duties.

My right hon. Friend does not control civilian staff numbers: this is a matter for the police authority. At the end of December 1991 the civilian strength for the Hampshire Constabulary was 1,039, as against 708 in 1979.

Vehicle Test Certificates

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the numbers of prosecutions for using or possessing stolen Ministry of Transport test certificates each year for the last five years by each of the following categories (a) heavy goods vehicles, (b) public service vehicles and (c) private cars.

Mr. John Patten: The information is not available centrally.

Extradition

Mr. Archer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons have been detained at his request by the police in (a) Spain, (b) Turkey, (c) Zimbabwe, (d) the Republic of South Africa and (e) all other countries and subsequently flown to the United Kingdom, arrested and remanded into custody for each of the last five years; and whether extradition procedures were followed in each case.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No such requests have been made in the last five years. International co-operation between police forces to apprehend people suspected of criminal offences is a matter for individual chief officers of police.

Charities

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what arrangements his Department has to assess proposals for regulations to be made by his Department and their effect on charities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Guidance on this matter, approved by the ministerial group on the voluntary sector, has been issued by the Home Office to all Government Departments. It has been circulated to officials within the Home Office. The guidance is designed to ensure that, when considering changes of policy or changes in procedures, the Home Office, and other Departments, should assess the implications which those changes may have for voluntary organisations and charities.

Sports Grounds

Ms Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what response he has made to the report by the Institution of Structural Engineers, "Appraisal of Sports Grounds", a copy of which has been sent to him; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: I was sent a copy of "Appraisal of Sports Grounds" on 30 May 1991. My private secretary replied to the Institution of Structural Engineers on 13 June 1991 to convey my thanks for the report and to relay my congratulations to the institution on producing a document which I regard as an important contribution towards achieving safety at sports grounds.

Football, London

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much was received by the Metropolitan police from London Football League clubs in respect of matches called off last season 1990-91 and 1991-92 to date.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that the Metropolitan police received £5,316 for matches postponed during the 1990-91 season. To date no payments have been received for the 1991-92 season.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the minimum amount of notice required by the Metropolitan police in respect of Football Association cup and league matches in London.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: This is a matter for the Commissioner of the Metropolis. I understand that safety certificates for most London clubs require that the police be notified of fixtures 28 days beforehand. In the case of cup match replays, the police require 10 days notice. The police are sometimes able to accommodate fixtures with less notice, depending on other operational commitments.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the total amount received by the Metropolitan police from London's Football League clubs in respect of charges for police services in seasons 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92 to date.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that the information is as follows:

Amount received by the Metropolitan police

Season	£
1989-90	2,384,379
1990-91	2,394,469
1991-92[1]	1,051,642

[1] To 20 February.

Wimbledon Tennis Championships

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much was received by the Metropolitan police in respect of police services at the 1991 Wimbledon tennis championships.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that the Metropolitan police received £172,296·50 for policing the 1991 Wimbledon tennis championships.

Car Crime

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the total number of car-related crimes between 1979 to the present in (a) Humberside and (b) Scunthorpe divisional police area.

Mr. John Patten: Figures for Humberside are contained in the table.

Figures for Scunthorpe are not available centrally.

Car crimes[1] recorded by the police in Humberside

Publicity

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list all the television advertising campaigns and all other publicity campaigns costing over £100,000 to be carried out by his Department in February, March, April, May or June of the current year.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: My Department is running a car crime prevention campaign on television from 11 February until June. It will be supported by press, poster and radio advertising for shorter spells within that period.

A smoke alarms campaign was run on television from 26 December until 12 February.

An absent voting campaign will be run on television and in the press for three days from the announcement of an election date.

A prison service recruitment campaign has been run in the press from 13 January and will continue until 13 April.

With the exception of absent voting, all Home Office advertising will be suspended for the duration of the general election campaign period.

Political Asylum

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applicants for political asylum, at ports of entry and after entry, since last July to the latest available date, have been (a) granted political asylum and (b) granted exceptional leave to remain; and what were the figures for the comparable period of 1990-91.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 19 February 1992]: The readily available information is of total grants of asylum or exceptional leave made in the period July to September 1991. This is shown in the table, along with corresponding information for the same period in 1990.

The figures for July to September 1991 may be an understatement because of delays in recording. Information on decisions made since September 1991 is not yet available.

Asylum

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the total number, to the latest available date, of applications for political asylum, from all sources, awaiting decision; and what were the comparable figures for the comparable period of each of the last three years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 19 February 1992]: Information is given in the table:

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Rabies

Mr. Hill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans are in place to end rabies quarantine for domestic animals; and what changes in procedure are expected as a result of the European single market.

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress has been made towards retaining United Kingdom quarantine regulations until rabies has been eradicated on the continent.

Mr. Maclean: European Community scientific experts have been asked to review the scientific evidence relating to the precautions necessary to avoid the spread of rabies by domestic animals. The Government would not support any proposal for changes to existing arrangements which would increase the risk of rabies being introduced to this country.

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress has been made in the EC on the elimination of rabies; and what facilities are available to the Commission to confirm the reports given by member states.

Mr. Maclean: I understand that the campaign to eradicate rabies from the European Community is progressing more slowly than the Commission originally expected. It is too early to say whether the campaign will be a complete success. Member states are required to report to the Commission on their plans for control of rabies, which is a compulsorily notifiable disease throughout the Community.

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what public statements the chief veterinary officer has made in 1992 about possible developments in EC law affecting United Kingdom quarantine regulations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The Chief Veterinary Officer has explained that the Commission has recently asked the Scientific Veterinary Committee to review the scientific evidence relating to the spread of rabies, in the light of suggestions that some categories of animals that have been vaccinated and blood-tested could represent no greater risk of the introduction of disease than those imported under our existing arrangements. The Government will not support measures which would increase the risk of rabies being introduced into this country.

Dietary Supplements

Mr. Hain: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he intends to support the European Commission view that dietary supplements with a greater strength than that in food should be classified as medicines and sold as such, regardless of whether the manufacturers made medical claims for them;

(2) if he will make a statement about European Community proposals to restrict the availability of dietary supplements and his assessment of the consequences of so doing to both consumers and practitioners.

Mr. Maclean: The European Commission have not issued proposals for legislation on dietary supplements but a discussion paper which presents various options for consideration by member states. One option would be to introduce maximum permitted daily doses for dietary supplements containing certain vitamins and minerals known to be toxic in excess. The Government support this proposal although we have not yet reached a firm view on the limit that would be appropriate for individual substances. The consequences of introducing maximum daily doses would depend on the limits actually set. But in principle such limits would protect consumers by preventing the sale of high dose products to consumers of food although such products would still be available for proper medicinal purposes.

Beef

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about the agreements which are currently in place between the United Kingdom and Argentina Governments concerning the import and export of beef between the two countries.

Mr. Gummer: No such agreements exist.

Fur Farming

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when the recommendation on fur farming adopted under the 1976 Council of Europe convention on the protection of animals kept for farming purposes was implemented; and what information, advice or instructions have been distributed to British fur factory farmers.

Mr. Maclean: The recommendation on fur farming was adopted in October 1990 and was implemented in October 1991. The Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food wrote to the Fur Breeders Association in November 1990 informing them of the adoption of the recommendation. The Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food also advised that officers of the State Veterinary Service would follow the recommendations in future inspections of fur farms.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what changes will be brought about in the living conditions of mink and Arctic foxes on fur farms as a result of implementing the recommendations on fur farming of the Council of Europe convention for the protection of animals kept for farming purposes 1976;

(2) what plans exist to inspect Arctic fox factory farms in Britain to ensure they comply with the recommendations contained in the Council of Europe convention for the protection of animals kept for farming purposes 1976.

Mr. Maclean: The recommendations have no legal force in themselves but it is expected that the European Community will incorporate them in binding legislation. In the meantime State Veterinary Service officers will continue to inspect fur farms and will advise operators to adopt the recommendations. For mink the standards broadly reflect current practices in this country, while for foxes implementation of the standards will lead to welfare improvements particularly through the provision of nesting boxes or platforms. The Community, when considering legislation on this subject, will have the opportunity to lay down more stringent conditions.

Animal Welfare

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which recommendations of the 1976 Council of Europe convention on the protection of animals kept for farming purposes have been implemented by Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Maclean: All recommendations are implemented, either by way of regulations or administratively through the issue of guidelines.

Publicity

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list all the television advertising campaigns and all other publicity campaigns costing over £100,000 to be carried out by his Department in February, March, April, May or June of the current year.

Mr. Curry: MAFF has no plans to carry out television advertising campaigns during February, March, April, May or June of the current year. An exhibition programme will take consumer information on a wide range of food safety and environmental issues to a number of major venues in England. The revision and distribution of the Department's publications on food will also continue.

Badgers

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent advice he has received from his consultative panel on badgers and tuberculosis; if he intends responding publicly to that advice; and if he will place a copy of the advice in the Library.

Mr. Maclean: The work of the consultative panel on badgers and tuberculosis is described in "Bovine Tuberculosis in Badgers" a report published annually by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and placed in the Library of the House. At its most recent meeting, on 13 February, the panel had a preliminary discussion of the feasibility of a control strategy based on the application of a diagnostic test applied to live badgers.

Pollution, Bristol Channel

Mr. Speller: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement upon the measures being taken to reduce the pollution in the Bristol channel caused by the dumping of sewage sludge from the Bristol and Avon area.

Mr. Curry: Regular monitoring shows that there is no evidence of harmful effects from licensed dumping of sewage sludge in the Bristol channel. Nevertheless the two water companies who currently dispose of their sludge there have well developed plans to terminate the operation by the end of 1993.

Pennine Dales

Mr. Hague: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to make changes to the Pennine dales environmentally sensitive area scheme.

Mr. Gummer: As I foreshadowed, I have decided to make changes to the provisions of the Pennine dales environmentally sensitive area scheme which I introduced on 15 January. This scheme was drawn up following extensive local consultations with farmers and conservationists. In the event, there do seem to be better ways of balancing the payments to achieve the envirmental ends. I have sought to maintain a premium payment for hay meadows, now set at £125 per hectare, while increasing the payment for pastures to £90 per hectare. I have also increased the payments for meadows which are managed without fertilisers to enhance their floral diversity to £210 per hectare. The necessary amending Statutory Instrument has today been laid before Parliament. I am sure that these changes will be welcomed by all farmers throughout the extended environmentally sensitive area as well as by the environmental interests. Questions of detailed application of the revised scheme will be addressed in a way which responds to local circumstances.

SCOTLAND

In-patients

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the number of in-patients (a) returned to the community in each year since 1985 and (b) the planned number to be returned into the community in the current and future years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information for all Scotland is as follows:

Discharges from mental illness hospitals, psychiatric units and mental handicap hospitals by disposal on discharge, years 1985-90

Year	Home alone	Home to relations/ friends	Discharges Hostel for ex-patients	Other hostel/home	Other type of residence	Total
1985	3,729	20,405	207	784	455	25,580
1986	4,992	20,136	305	1,043	425	25,901
1987	4,366	20,669	294	1,067	524	26,920

Year	Home alone	Home to relations/ friends	Discharges Hostel for ex-patients	Other hostel/home	Other type of residence	Total
1988	4,667	21,189	310	1,219	542	27,927
1989	4,970	20,768	293	1,323	507	27,851
1990	5,091	21,308	333	1,567	583	28,882

There is no planned number for current or future years. Each patient is considered on their individual merits and only those patients who would benefit from a community placement are offered such a move.

Dykebar Hospital

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what support services are available for patients from Dykebar hospital, Paisley who have been or will be released into the community; and which agencies he expects to provide each service.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The requirements of each patient will vary depending on their individual needs. Only those patients who are inappropriately placed in hospital and who would benefit from the move will be considered for a community placement. Patients would be offered such a placement only if appropriate support arrangements were in place.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received in relation to the services provided by Dykebar hospital, Paisley.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Since July 1987 I have received only one such representation, relating in that case to laundry services at Dykebar.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he has had with Argyll and Clyde health board regarding the services and facilities provided at Dykebar hospital, Paisley; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: None. It is, however, open to the board to raise any issue, at any time as part of the regular meetings and contact that is established to discuss the full range of services and strategic issues.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much (a) has been spent, (b) is being spent and (c) is planned to be spent on the development of Dykebar hospital, Paisley; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: A total of £7·4 million has been invested since 1984 to the end of the financial year 1991-92 and a further investment of £2 million is planned within the next three years.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what capital developments are currently taking place at Dykebar hospital, Paisley, and what is the purpose and financial value of each development.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The development of a £1·3 million purpose-built 24-bedded intensive therapy clinic for acutely disturbed patients and the provision of a new £150,000 dispensary are currently underway.

In addition, there are five minor capital developments with a total value of £125,000 which are designed to improve the amenity and facilities for patients in the hospital.

The decentralisation of the hospital boiler plant is currently being planned at an estimated cost of £250,000. This investment will potentially yield an energy efficiency saving of £50,000 per annum.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many in-patients there are currently at Dykebar hospital, Paisley; and what is the projection for the current and future years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: On 11 February this year there were 437 in-patients at Dykebar hospital. The Argyll and Clyde health board expects that level to be maintained for the current year and beyond.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what financial assistance has been or will be earmarked for local authorities and other agencies to provide support and assistance to patients who have been or will be released into the community from Dykebar hospital, Paisley.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: It is for the Argyll and Clyde health board, the local authorities and other agencies to determine from within the financial and other resources available to them what level of provision is appropriate to the needs of any patients transferring from Dykebar hospital.

I announced on 18 November last that funds available to local authorities under the mental illness specific grant scheme would double for 1992-93 to £6 million. I have also recently announced that £33 million in total will be available during the period 1991-92 to 1994-95 under the bridging finance scheme to assist their programmes of care in the community. Of this, some £2·26 million has been allocated to Argyll and Clyde health board and it has been invited to submit bids for a further allocation.

These decisions underline the Government's main aim of improving the quality of life for the mentally ill and their carers and our commitment to assisting health boards and local authorities in providing facilities in the community to reduce the number of people inappropriately placed in hospital.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has for the long-term future of Dykebar hospital, Paisley; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Such matters fall entirely for consideration by the Argyll and Clyde health board.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to dispose of land or assets associated with Dykebar hospital, Paisley; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: There are no current plans to dispose of land or assets associated with Dykebar hospital, other than a small strip of roadway which was not required for health service purposes, and over which the health board will retain a right of access.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to review the services and facilities provided at Dykebar hospital, Paisley; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: It is for Argyll and Clyde health board to review continuously the needs of the population that it services and how to meet these. The managers and clinicians at Dykebar hospital should also consider regularly how its services can be improved and should discuss that with the board.

Patients (Relocation)

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to relocate patients from the state hospital at Carstairs to Dykebar hospital in Paisley; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The suitability of patients for transfer out of the state hospital following treatment is a matter for agreement between the clinicians at the state hospital and those of the referring health board.

Economy (Paisley)

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to regenerate the economy of the Paisley post code area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The Government's main instrument for economic development, environmental improvement and training in the Paisley area is the Renfrewshire enterprise company. The company has a range of powers available to it and will continue to fulfil these functions. Renfrewshire Enterprise's budget of £24·7 million for 1991-92 is substantial, and makes it well placed to respond to opportunities within the local economy.

In addition, the Ferguslie Park partnership in Paisley is implementing an agreed strategy for the comprehensive long-term regeneration of the area.

Elderslie Hospital

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to dispose of or acquire any land or assets in relation to Elderslie hospital; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: There are no current plans to either dispose or of acquire land or assets in connection with Elderslie hospital.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what services are provided in or from Elderslie hospital; what plans he has for the development of services at Elderslie hospital; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Elderslie hospital provides 10 continuing care places for young adults, and eight respite care places for children, with a mental handicap. The services provided include medical and nursing care and paramilitary input where appropriate. There are also links with community mental handicap nursing staff.

As part of its continuing review of service provision, Argyll and Clyde health board is considering how best to improve the facilities and care at the hospital.

Argyll and Clyde Health Board

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what financial support has been earmarked for Argyll and Clyde health board to provide support and assistance to patients who have been or will be released into the community; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: It is for Argyll and Clyde health board to determine from within the overall resources available to it what financial and other support should be made for the health care of those patients who would benefit from a community placement.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to visit Paisley, Johnstone or Elderslie to discuss the economic, housing and social problems; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The Secretary of State has no immediate plans to visit Paisley, Johnstone or Elderslie. His last visit to Paisley was on 4 October 1991 to launch the Glencoats area development, a major joint venture housing initiative associated with the Ferguslie Park partnership.

SSSIs

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many sites of special scientific interest are currently designated in Scotland; what means exist to monitor loss and damage to sites of special scientific interest in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: A total of 1,342 sites of special scientific interest have been notified in Scotland. Site monitoring, using standard recording techniques, is undertaken by local staff of the Nature Conservancy Council for Scotland. Site visits are the usual method, but other techniques such as overflying or comparative air photography may also be used when appropriate. In addition sites may be the subject of specific monitoring projects; examples include research into the effects of skiing, overgrazing on moorland and the acidification of lochs.

Constituencies

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the acreage of each of the six geographically largest parliamentary constituencies in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The areas by hectares of each of the six geographically largest parliamentary constituencies in Scotland are as follows in descending order:

Parliamentary constituency	Area by hectares
Ross, Cromarty and Skye	954,680
Inverness, Nairn and Lochaber	870,708
Caithness and Sutherland	788,297
Argyll and Bute	661,362
North Tayside	485,104
Galloway and Upper Nithsdale	441,883

Housing Valuations, Borders

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the district valuer's valuation for houses in each of the areas in the borders proposed to be sold by Scottish Homes to the Waverley housing trust.

Mr. Lang: I am considering the terms of the sale proposed by Scottish Homes to Waverley housing trust. Details such as the district valuer's valuations will be made available when I announce my decision.

NHS Trusts

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which hospitals within the Renfrew district area of Argyll and Clyde health board have applied for trust status; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No applications for NHS trust status have been received from within the Argyll and Clyde health board area. However, given the benefits to patients which are now clearly emerging from existing operational trusts, I would expect those charged with health care in Renfrew district, as elsewhere, would wish to examine the matter very carefully.

Spanish Customs Officers

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what assessment has been made on the impact on the Scottish fishing industry of the interruption of supplies bound for the Spanish market as a result of planned industrial action by Spanish customs officers;

(2) what discussions he has had with the Scottish Fish Merchants Association on [illegible]nned industrial action by Spanish customs officers.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Spanish market is a very important outlet for Scottish fish and shellfish and it would be of some concern if the trade with Spain were to be disrupted. For the moment, industrial action by Spanish customs agents appears to be sporadic with notice of their intentions being given in advance. As yet there have been no representations from Scottish fish processing sources on the matter. We are continuing to monitor the situation.

Food Hygiene

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the likely timetable for the introduction of amendments to the Food Hygiene (Scotland) Regulations 1959.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Paisley, South (Mr. McMaster) on 21 February 1992.

Repossession Orders

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many orders for repossession of houses there were in each sheriff court area in Scotland for 1979, 1990 and 1991.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 19 February 1992]: Information on orders for repossession of houses is included in the returns relating to all actions involving land or heritable estate which are supplied to the courts for the purposes of the Judicial Statistics (Scotland) Act 1869 and cannot be identified separately.

DEFENCE

Atomic Energy Authority, Harwell

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) from which subheads of which votes funds for his Department's contracts with the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority establishment at Harwell are taken;

(2) what contracts his Department has with the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority establishment at Harwell; what are the purposes of these contracts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The Atomic Weapons Establishment has a number of contracts which utilise the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority's expertise in the fields of nuclear waste treatment, plutonium handling, safety studies, materials analysis and equipment testing and calibration. Funding for these contracts is provided from class 1, defence vote 2—defence procurement. It would not be in the national interest to reveal further details of the funding arrangements.

Nuclear-Powered Warship Safety Committee

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the terms of reference of the nuclear-powered warship safety committee.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The terms of reference are to advise the Secretary of State for Defence and other Ministers on all public safety matters associated with the construction, operation and maintenance of nuclear-powered warships.

Procurement

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what arrangements his Department has to assess the effect of proposed changes of regulations relating to the defence procurement programme on supplier companies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: My Department is unaware of any proposals for such changes that would affect supplier companies.

Publicity

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all the television advertising campaigns and all other publicity campaigns costing over £100,000 to be carried out by his Department in February, March, April, May or June of the current year.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The information requested is as follows:

Royal Navy/Royal Marines

1. Press campaign to recruit RN/RM officers—February/March 1992.
2. Press campaign to recruit specialist RN officer categories—February/March 1992.

(This is in place of the cinema campaign mentioned in my answer of 8 November 1991, at column 297.)

Territorial Army

1. Combined TV and press recruiting campaign—January/March 1992.

Northern Ireland

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the involvement of military forces in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The armed forces are in Northern Ireland acting in support of the Royal Ulster Constabulary to defeat terrorism. We are determined to defeat terrorism within the rule of the law.

Housing Task Force

Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects the housing task force to report.

Mr. Tom King: The housing task force, under the chairmanship of my noble Friend the Earl of Arran, was required to look radically at housing for the services. This it has done and it has now reported to me with proposals for the immediate future, and the medium and longer term. It has undertaken a major task in a short time and I pay tribute to the contribution made by its members, including those from the private sector, the service charities and the voluntary housing sector. I have placed in the Library a note describing the actions that are being taken in the light of its recommendations. Separately, I have placed a note in the Library setting out a number of improvements to provision for resettlement advice and support for the services.

ENERGY

Renewable Energy

14. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what initiatives he is taking to assist local authorities in the development of renewable energy sources.

Mr. Moynihan: The Department of Energy is supporting a series of pilot studies to assist local authorities to identify the renewable energy potential in their area and to explore the associated planning and environmental issues. The first two studies are taking place in Cumbria and Devon.

20. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what new plans he has to increase electricity production from renewable sources.

Mr. Moynihan: The non-fossil fuel obligation will continue to bring forward additional renewables-sourced generating capacity. Meanwhile, I am reviewing my Department's renewable energy strategy.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what arrangements his Department has to assess the effect of new rules and regulations proposed by his Department which would affect small firms engaged in renewable energy projects; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: Proposed new regulations are subject to a compliance cost assessment, which would include consideration of the effect on business. The departmental deregulation unit regularly surveys the scope for reducing burdens on business. However, at present I have no proposals to introduce new rules or regulations which would affect small firms engaged in renewable energy projects.

United Kingdom Continental Shelf

19. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what was the level of gas production on the United Kingdom continental shelf in 1990.

Mr. Moynihan: In 1990, 50 billion cubic metres of gas were produced from the United Kingdom continental shelf. My Department's provisional estimate is that the level of production rose by over 10 per cent. in 1991.

Petroleum Act 1987

21. Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has any proposals to modify the Petroleum Act 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: As far as the abandonment provisions of the Petroleum Act 1987 are concerned, I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply that I gave him on 9 December 1991 at column 335. In addition, the Offshore Safety Bill makes provision for those powers in the Petroleum Act which relate to the establishment of safety zones to be made an "existing statutory provision" of the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974. There are no other plans to modify the Petroleum Act.

Carbon Dioxide Emissions

22. Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his estimate of the level of carbon dioxide emissions produced as a result of energy use in the home; and if he will make a statement.

24. Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his estimate of the level of carbon dioxide emissions produced as a result of energy use in the home.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: It is estimated that in 1990 the domestic sector emitted some 150 million tonnes of carbon dioxide (or 40 million tonnes of carbon). This represents about a quarter of total emissions. These figures take into account the domestic sector's estimated share of emissions from the electricity supply industry.

Energy Prices

23. Sir Anthony Durant: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy by how much the level of prices for fuel, light and power has changed in real terms since 1986.

Mr. Moynihan: I refer my hon. Friend to the oral answer that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Twickenham (Mr. Jessel) earlier today.

Coal Task Force

25. Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he is in a position to respond to the report of the coal task force.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Our response to the report by the task force on coal research and development issues will be published in due course.

Coal Industry (Industrial Disputes)

26. Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what was the level of production lost through industrial disputes in the coal industry in (a) 1980-81, (b) 1986-87 and (c) 1990-91.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Saleable tonnage lost as a result of industrial disputes for the years quoted are as follows:

	Million tonnes
1980-81	1·5
1986-87	1·0
1990-91	0·2

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many days were lost through strikes in the coal industry in 1979, 1983, 1987 and 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wakeham: This Department does not collect information of this nature. British Coal, however, records saleable tonnage lost as a result of disputes in its annual report, and the latest figures are:

	Million tonnes
1978-79	1·5
1982-83	3·6
1986-87	1·0
1990-91	0·2

Electricity

27. Mr. Andrew Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy by how much domestic electricity prices rose (a) between 1974 and 1979 and (b) since 1984.

Mr. Wakeham: Between 1974 and 1979 domestic electricity prices rose by 16 per cent. in real terms (an increase of 147 per cent. in cash terms). Between 1984 and 1991 they fell by five per cent. in real terms (an increase of 41 per cent. in cash terms).

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list all the applications under section 36 of the Electricity Act 1989, stating for each application whether it was granted, refused, or is outstanding; and whether it has gone to a public inquiry.

Mr. Wakeham: The applications made under section 36 of the Electricity Act 1989 are as listed.

Citizens Charter

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he last met the chairmen of the regional electricity companies to discuss the citizens charter.

Mr. Wakeham: I meet chairmen of the regional electricity companies from time to time to discuss a range of issues.

Severn Barrage

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will report progress on the Severn barrage project.

Mr. Moynihan: A £50,000 preliminary financing study for the barrage has just been agreed, in addition to the existing environmental and energy capture studies costing £940,000.

Verification Technology

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether his Department received any invitation to (a) attend, (b) participate in or (c) present a paper on radioisotope monitoring at the Joint Verification Technology Information Centre/Royal Astronomical Society discussion meeting on nuclear verification being held at the Geological Society on 14 February.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: No.

Photovoltaic Research

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what funding his Department has provided into photovoltaic research for each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Moynihan: On 8 May 1991 I announced that the Government would fund a £250,000 programme of research into photovoltaics. It is expected that expenditure in FY1991/92 will amount to about £60,000. Prior to my announcement, the Department's renewable programme undertook an investigation into photovoltaics costing about £40,000, and the report was published in 1990 as ETSU-R-50, "Review of Photovoltaic Power Technology". Between FY1981/82 and FY1990/91, the solar element of the renewables programme was directed primarily at passive solar design, rather than photovoltaics, with expenditure rising from £0·7 million to £2·1 million during that period.

Oil

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how much oil is refined per head of population in each Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development country and member state of the European Community.

Mr. Moynihan: In 1990, the latest year for which data are available, the amount of oil refined per head of population in OECD countries and member states of the European Community was as follows;

Country	Tonnes of refined oil per head of population
Australia	1·75
Austria	1·16
Belgium[1]	2·96
Canada	3·16
Denmark[1]	1·54
Finland	2·10
France[1]	1·40
Germany[1]	1·71

United States	2·92

[1] Member states of the European Community.

Source: Population—OECD Main Economic Indicators.
Source: Oil data—International Energy Agency.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what proportion of United Kingdom oil is refined within Wales; and how much this is per head of population.

Mr. Moynihan: In 1990, 19·7 per cent. of United Kingdom oil was refined in Wales. The amount of oil refined per head of population in Wales in 1990 was 6·06 tonnes.

International Atomic Energy Agency

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what information he has regarding the annual budget of the International Atomic Energy Agency for safeguards and other purposes for each year since 1979;

(2) what has been the annual contribution in financial terms to the International Atomic Energy Agency for each year since 1979; and what non-financial assistance has been given.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Details of all these are given in the International Atomic Energy Agency's annual accounts. I am making arrangements for copies of the accounts to be deposited in the Library of the House.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy from which countries radioactive and toxic waste was treated at the nuclear re-processing plant at Sellafield in Cumbria from 1 April 1991 to 31 December 1991; and what methods of transportation were used.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Neither radioactive nor toxic waste is imported for treatment at Sellafield. During the period mentioned by the hon. Member, spent nuclear fuel from Italy and Japan was reprocessed to recover the uranium and plutonium for possible recycling. The fuel in question was transported by sea and rail. The arrangements were subject to the stringent requirements laid down by the appropriate national and international regulations. Fuel from United Kingdom customers was also reprocessed at Sellafield during the period.

Libya

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has received the report of the outcome of the visit of the Director-General of the International Atomic Energy Agency to Libya on 2 February.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The International Atomic Energy Agency has made a report in the form of a press release on this visit. A copy of the press release has been placed in the Library of the House.

Balance of Trade (Fuels)

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the balance of trade in fuels in 1991.

Mr. Wakeham: In 1991 the United Kingdom had a trading surplus in fuels worth £104 million.

Coal Imports

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his estimate of the volume of coal which will be imported into the United Kingdom during 1992 and in each of the next three years; and what proportion he expects imported coal to be of the total tonnage consumed in each of those years.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: We do not make such estimates.

Privatisations

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his estimate of the amount of electricity and gas saved since privatisation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: In the electricity industry, competition has created an incentive on generators to reduce their fuel costs and an incentive on customers to manage their demand. As a result, the National Grid Company has noted evidence that high peak demands are now being managed more effectively, and older, inefficient plant is being closed down.

The Government are taking steps in the Utilities Bill to open up the gas market to wider competition, which will encourage a further focusing on costs by supplier and consumer as they evaluate the new options open to them.

British Gas and the regional electricity companies have also introduced initiatives to encourage their customers to use energy more efficiently, such as advisory services, Codes of Practice, competitions for industrial and commercial consumers, and appliance labelling. In addition, the Government have welcomed OFGAS' intention to incorporate into the gas tariff an "E factor" which would allow British Gas to pass on costs of energy efficiency programmes to consumers, and also the consultation document from OFFER on energy efficiency in the electricity industry.

Greenwich Power Station

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he will take into account the impact on the water quality and fish stocks of the Thames when considering whether to approve the application from MetroPower Ltd., to reconstruct the Greenwich power station.

Mr. Wakeham: I am obliged, when considering an application made under section 36 of the Electricity Act 1989, to take into account the environmental effects before deciding whether to grant my consent to an application.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will take into account the reports by Greenwich environmental health department and by the director of public health for Bexley on the rate of respiratory diseases among the population of Greenwich when considering whether to approve the application from MetroPower Ltd., to reconstruct the Greenwich power station.

Mr. Wakeham: I have not received either of the reports. Greenwich borough council, which is the relevant planning authority, has yet to give me its views. It is a matter for the council whether to include these reports when submitting its views to me.

Offshore Installations

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) in relation to the relevant provisions contained in the Petroleum Act 1987, if he will list the offshore installations and pipeline networks which have been dismantled and removed or those which are to be demolished and withdrawn from their sites on the United Kingdom continental shelf; and if he will make a statement;

(2) in relation to the relevant provisions contained in the Petroleum Act 1987, how many programmes involving the abandonment of (a) offshore installations and (b) submarine pipe line networks he has approved over the past three years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: Over the past three years my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy has approved two abandonment programmes under the terms of the Petroleum Act 1987, relating to the Crawford (block 9/28a) and Blair (block 16/21a) fields. On the Crawford field all installations and pipelines have been dismantled and removed from the United Kingdom continental shelf. They comprised:

—The North Sea Pioneer floating production system.
—The Hamilton 2 CALM loading buoy.
—Subsea facilities, including flexible pipelines and control lines.

On the Blair field, the single production wellhead has been dismantled and removed; two small partially trenched pipelines have been left in place after cleaning and, to prevent interference with fishing vessels, have been covered with concrete mattresses where they were not trenched. Approval of the abandonment programme was subject to conditions requiring inspection and maintenance of these pipelines.

No other installations or pipelines have been dismantled and removed. The Piper Alpha installation was toppled in situ in 1989 as it was not safe or practicable to abandon it by other means.

The Government have made clear that each abandonment programme submitted under the terms of the Petroleum Act 1987 will be considered on its merits, in the light of all the circumstances prevailing at the time, and taking full account of environmental and fishing interests. The standards taken into account when a decision is made regarding the removal of disused offshore installations and structures will be consistent with the guidelines adopted by the International Maritime Organisation (IMO). Application of the IMO guidelines means that the majority of platforms on the UKCS will be entirely removed.

Publicity

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list all the television advertising campaigns and all other publicity campaigns costing over £100,000 to be carried out by his Department in February, March, April, May, or June of the current year.

Mr. Wakeham: My Department has a continuing programme of publicity to promote energy efficiency, the United Kingdom offshore supplies industry and renewable sources of energy. Within the energy efficiency programme, both the joint campaign with the Department of the Environment on the environment and home energy efficiency and the "Making a Corporate Commitment" campaign will cost over £100,000 between February and June this year. No television advertising is envisaged during this period.

Wind Power

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what information he holds on plans by electricity companies to extend wind power facilities; if he will list the sites that are under consideration for the development of wind farms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: Information is held by the Department of Energy on plans by the electricity companies to extend wind power facilities through registration of these schemes under the non-fossil fuel obligation. In the tranches of NFFO announced to date, only three projects (out of 57) have been registered by an electricity company. These are:

Carmarthen bay	National Power
Richborough	PowerGen
Cold Northcott	National Power

Full lists of sites that have contracted for wind projects under the NFFO are in the Library of the House. Other plans for new wind power facilities are a matter for the companies concerned.

Employment Survey

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what meetings he has had with representatives of the oil industry, the oil industry trade unions and the police services in connection with his Department's oil and gas facilities employment survey; what are the objectives of this survey; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: Officials from my Department meet regularly with the relevant representatives of the oil industry and security agencies to discuss this and other wider security issues.

It is Government policy to carry out a counter-terrorist check on anyone who is going to be allowed to be unescorted in or on an installation of national importance. The Government would be failing in their duty if they did not take appropriate measures to protect these installations and the work force from deliberate man-made or accidental disasters.

Power Stations

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list all the power stations in England and Wales of 300 MW or over which are located in residential areas.

Mr. Wakeham: The table lists those powers stations currently operating in England and Wales of 300 MW or over, with the name of the county in which each is situated. My Department's records do not show which, if any, are located in residential areas: these stations were in many cases constructed many years ago, so that records relating to the grant of consent would not give the information requested.

Dioxins

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the calculations and data upon which figure 2, Food Surveillance Paper No. 31, "Estimated relative contribution to total TCDD released into the atmosphere from sources of dioxins and furans in the United Kingdom" is based.

Mr. Trippier: Figure 2 in Food Surveillance Paper 31, "Dioxins in Food" is taken from information in Chapter 3 of the Department of the Environment's Pollution Paper 27, "Dioxins in the Environment" published in 1989. The figure shows the estimated relative combined contributions from both known combustion sources and other sources, such as manufacture, processing and use of chlorinated aromatic and other chemicals and chlorine bleached materials and metallurgical processes. It thus refers to releases to the environment, not just atmosphere.

Unfortunately an arithmetical error has affected the numbers shown in Figure 2, although not the relative importance given to each source. The correct figures taken from Pollution Paper 27 are given in the table. I would stress, however, that the figures are relatively crude estimates although based on the best information available at the time.

Source	Relative contribution per cent.	per cent.	Estimated quantity released into the environment each year, g TCDD[1]
Municipal incinerators	20·00		1,500

Child Refugees

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what financial support his Department is providing to West Sussex local authorities for the care of child refugees who arrived at Gatwick airport.

Mr. Key: I have been asked to reply. Support for local authorities' revenue expenditure is provided through revenue support grant; authorities in West Sussex will receive a total of £149·739 million in this way in 1992-93. The grant is not hypothecated to particular local services.

Council Vacancies

Sir David Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce legislation to require the chairman of a parish or town council to advise each member of the council of a vacancy for a councillor.

Mr. Portillo: I have been asked to reply.

A parish council must give immediate public notice of a vacancy by posting a notice in some conspicuous place or places within its area. I have no plans to add to that requirement.

Non-domestic Rates

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what reductions or remissions in liability for non-domestic rates have been made by local authorities using their powers under section 49 of the Local Government Finance Act 1988.

Mr. Key: Local authorities in England used their powers under section 49 of the 1988 Act to reduce rates bills in 1990-91 by a total of £23,582.

Departmental Annual Report

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many copies of his departmental annual report 1992 have been printed; at what cost; and what arrangements have been made for distribution of the report.

Mr. Heseltine: A total of 3,800 copies of the Department of the Environment 1992 annual report were printed. The costs of printing, publishing and distribution are borne by HMSO which aims to recover its costs from sales revenue. Copies of the report are available from all HMSO bookshops and agents and from HMSO's distribution centre by mail or telephone order.

Visitor Statistics

Mr. Allason: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how the statistics relating to (a) visitor bed nights and (b) day visitors are compiled for the purpose of preparing standard spending assessments in English resort towns.

Mr. Key: Details are given on page 14 of the The Revenue Support Grant Distribution (Amendment) (No. 2) Report (England) which is in the Library. No allowance is made in SSAs at present for day visitors; there is no consistent and reliable source of this information for all authorities.

Mr. Allason: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on what dates the statistics relating to visitor bed nights were collected in 1990-91.

Mr. Key: The allowance for overnight visitors within the All Other Services element of standard spending assessments has been updated for 1992-93. It is now based on information from a number of sources: the British Home Tourism Surveys (1980 to 1984), the British Tourism Surveys (1987 and 1988) and the United Kingdom Tourism Survey (UKTS) (1989) for domestic visitors. It is the intention to incorporate in future years information from the UKTS for 1990 and 1991.

Urban Development, Gosforth

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has yet received a further application from Newcastle upon Tyne city council for permission to develop the Rectory road allotments, south Gosforth; and whether he will undertake to consult the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, Central on any such application.

Mr. Yeo: I understand that Newcastle upon Tyne city council will be submitting an application shortly for consent to dispose of the Rectory road allotments, south Gosforth. Any representations which the hon. Member wishes to make on his own or his constituents' behalf will be taken into account when the application is decided.

BCCI

Mr. Stott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give local authorities credit approval to cover Bank of Credit and Commerce International debts.

Mr. Key: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, East (Mr. Brown) on 18 February at column 76. Any further applications will be considered on their merits.

Disabled Council Tenants

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from Manchester city council for a supplementary allocation to the housing investment programme for adaptations to the homes of disabled council tenants; what reply he is sending; what action he will be taking; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: The Secretary of State has received a letter on this subject from the chair of the housing committee of Manchester city council. I have replied today and will place a copy of my response in the Library.

Waste Discharges (River Mersey)

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list the number of consents to companies to discharge waste in the River Mersey issued for each year since 1979;

(2) if he will list the number of prosecutions brought together with the number of convictions secured for polluting the River Mersey for each year since 1979.

Mr. Baldry: I understand that information on numbers of discharge consents, or on prosecutions or convictions, is not held centrally by the NRA in respect of individual rivers.

CITES

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment who will be attending the Conference in Trade on Endangered Species meeting in Japan on 2 March as representatives of Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Baldry: I shall attend the meeting from 9 to 13 March. From 2 March the United Kingdom will also be represented by three officials from the Department, two officials from the Joint Nature Conservation Committee and one from each of the Royal Botanic Gardens, Kew and the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. Three members of the Hong Kong Conference in Trade on Endangered Species Management Authority will also be on the United Kingdom delegation.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if Her Majesty's Government will resist any attempts to re-open world trade in leopard skins, cheetah skins, black rhino and elephant products due to be discussed at the Conference in Trade on Endangered Species meeting in Japan on 2 March.

Mr. Baldry: On the question of elephants, I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Norfolk, North-West (Mr. Bellingham) on 19 February 1992, Official Report, column 202. The Government are also opposed to any action that could re-open trade in products from rhinoceroses, cheetahs and leopards.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the annual loss of rents and community charge on the vacant properties in the public and private sector in Liverpool during the past 12 months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: Information about rent loss from vacant local authority dwellings is collected on housing revenue account subsidy claim forms submitted by local authorities to the Department. Liverpool city council's mid-year claim form for 1991-92 shows the following estimates:

rent loss on vacant local authority dwellings in 1990-91, £5,111,100

rent loss on vacant local authority dwellings in 1991-92, £6,428,400

The Department does not collect information about rent loss on vacant dwellings in the private sector, nor about losses in respect of community charges on vacant dwellings.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will direct Liverpool city council to refund the cost of wrongfully issued summonses to community charge payers who have paid their bills.

Mr. Key: A community chargepayer becomes liable to pay costs only when a liability order has been grated against him by a magistrates' court. In the case of a wrongful summons, it would be the local authority who would bear the cost of the abortive work.

Housing Investment, Coventry

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the level of the housing investment programme allocation awarded to Coventry in each financial year since 1978-79; and what the damages amounted to in real terms.

Mr. Yeo: Housing investment programme (HIP) allocation and gross capital expenditure figures are as follows:

£ thousands

	HIP allocation		Gross expenditure[1]

[1] Since 1981-82 local authorities have been able to augment the borrowing power of their HIP allocations by using the prescribed proportion of their capital receipts.

[2] From 1990-91, under the new capital finance system, the HIP allocation does not convey borrowing approval directly. The allocation totals are the HIP allocation plus supplementary credit approvals for housing projects.

[3] Provisional estimate of final allocation.

An initial HIP allocation of £10·2 million—£9·7 million at 1991-92 prices—has been issued for 1992-93 and additional resources—supplementary credit approvals—may be allocated later.

Leeds Development Corporation

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 11 February Official Report, columns 430-31 if he will set out the basis of calculation of the employment statistics for the area covered by the Leeds development corporation.

Mr. Key: The employment figures are provided annually as at 1 April by economic consultants. These are based on a sample survey of existing firms operating within the development area together with new firms which commenced trading during the 12 months to 31 March.

Estate Action Programme

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he now expects the estate action programme to be completed on the Phythian street estate, Liverpool; and whether there are any plans to include the Chatsworth street estate, Edge Hill, in a similar programme.

Mr. Yeo: I expect the estate action programme at the Phythian street estate in Liverpool to be completed during the financial year 1994-95.

My right hon. Friend announced on 16 December 1991 that Liverpool city council had been invited to work up a detailed estate action scheme for the Chatsworth estate in Liverpool, with an anticipated start in 1992-93.

Publicity

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all the television advertising campaigns and all other publicity campaigns costing over £100,000 to be carried out by his Department in February, March, April, May or June of the current year.

Mr. Heseltine: Jointly with the Department of Energy my Department will continue to carry out the campaign "Helping the Earth Begins at Home". This will run for at least two years.

An information campaign is now in progress to publicise the provisions of the Environmental Protection Act, 1990, relating to the duty of care for the carriage and disposal of waste. Also, in the coming months, I intend to mount campaigns relating to citizens' environmental rights and initiatives for protecting the countryside.

None of these campaigns involves television advertising.

Peat Extraction, Thorne Moor

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consultation he has had with English Heritage over the arrangement between English Nature and Fisons plc on peat extraction on Thorne moor, Yorkshire.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 20 February 1992]: None. Such consultations are a matter for English Nature to undertake as they consider necessary. I am advised that discussions with English Heritage on the future management of the Thorne conservation area will now take place.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to review the regulations concerning sites of special scientific interest in the light of the arrangements between English Nature and Fisons plc on peat extraction on Thorne moor, Yorkshire.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 20 February 1992]: None. I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment to my hon. Friend the Member for Taunton (Mr. Nicholson) on 12 February 1992, Official Report, column 506.

Fal Estuary (Pollution)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the cost involved in the proposals submitted to his Department by the National Rivers Authority for medium to long-term plans to tackle the pollution in the Fal estuary from the River Carnon; when he expects to take a decision; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 21 February 1992]: The National Rivers Authority's initial estimates of costs for the main options for tackling the mine discharge into the Carnon river are:

	£ thousands
	1991-92	1992-93	1993-94
Monitoring programme	342	180	—
Short term treatment	185	460	—
Medium term treatment by biological anaerobic system:
planning and design	—	100	—
construction and operation	—	900	350

Estimates have also been submitted for an alternative method of treatment in the medium term costing some £3 million per annum in a full year, and a longer term solution costing some £2·3 million over the first two years plus research and development costs. All these estimates may be subject to substantial amendment as planning and design work proceeds.

These are estimates of costs and not bids for extra resources. The NRA's head office are currently assessing the extent to which they can make provision for expenditure on Wheal Jane from within their existing budgets for 1991-92 and 1992-93. We expect to receive their assessment for 1991-92 later this month or early next, so that we can consider their grant-in-aid position. As in previous years, we will be reviewing later this year whether the NRA's grant for 1992-93 is adequate. The cost of installing and operating improved medium term treatment arrangements at Wheal Jane will be taken into account at that review.

For 1993-94 and later years, the NRA's grant will be considered in the normal way as a part of the 1992 public expenditure survey.

Ozone Layer

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will seek a meeting of the Montreal protocol signatories to discuss the latest reports about the depletion of the ozone layer; what consideration he has given to an earlier phasing out of CFCs because of their known effect on the layer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier [pursuant to his answer, 12 February 1992, c. 504]: I wish to stress that the Government are greatly concerned about the effects of ozone depletion and are committed to phasing out CFCs by the end of 1995 at the latest. Last December, I proposed to the EC Environment Council that the Montreal protocol's phase-out dates be brought forward to the end of 1994 for halons, and the end of 1995 for CFCs and other ozone-depleting substances. I also proposed that the intermediate cut stages should be brought forward to the end of 1993, with an 85 per cent. cut for CFCs and carbon tetrachloride and 50 per cent. cut for halons and methyl chloroform.

Following my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State's letter of 14 February to the President of the EC Environment Council, urging the Community to take a stronger line on the early phase-out of CFCs, the European Commission has now proposed the phase-out of all controlled substances by the end of 1995. This issue was discussed at the informal Environment Council in Estoril, Portugal which I attended last weekend. Commissioner Ripa de Meana set out the Commission's proposals, which were generally welcomed by member states. Formal agreement to the proposed new phase-out dates will need to be given at the meeting of the Environment Council in March.

My officials are continuing to review our position with industry.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Local Offices

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish his definitions of (a) field offices, (b) inspector outstations and (c) customer access points in relation to the Benefits Agency; if he will list by category the offices within Renfrewshire; and what plans he has to recategorise any of these offices.

Mr. Jack: The location of field offices, inspector outstations and customer access points is a matter for Miss Ann Chant, chief executive of the Contributions Agency. She will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Social Fund

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security for the year 1991-92 to date, how many social fund applications were referred back by social fund inspectors for reconsideration by social fund officers in Sheffield East and Sheffield West district; and for each district how many of those were (a) community care grants, (b) budgeting loans and (c) crisis loans; how many were revised wholly in the applicant's favour; how many were revised partially in favour of the applicant; and how many were unchanged from the social fund officer's original decision, broken down by district and type of application.

Mr. Scott: I am informed by the social fund commissioner that all the information cannot be provided in the form requested. The table summarises the data collected on decisions made by the social fund inspectors for the named districts, broken down by payment type, community care grant (CCG), budgeting loan (BL) and crisis loan (CL).

District / Type of application	Sheffield East			Sheffield West
	CCG	BL	CL	CCG	BL	CL
(a) Referred back for determination by social fund officer (SFO)	42	22	2	11	5	1
(b) Changed by SFO	6	6	0	4	2	0
(c) Unchanged by SFO	35	15	2	3	1	1

Notes:

1. Data for April 1991 to 14 February 1992.
2. Changed decisions are defined as those resulting in an award being made to the applicant (b). Included in (b) are partially changed decisions which are not separately recorded. (c) represents decisions where no additional payment is awarded by the SFO on redetermination.
3. The difference in figures between the total of (b) + (c) and (a) is due to cases where notification of the final decision has not yet been received at the office of the social fund inspectors.

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the total number of applications for review to social fund officers for the year 1991-92 to date in the Sheffield East and Sheffield West districts; and for each district how many of those were (a) community care grants, (b) budgeting loans and (c) crisis loans; of those applications what was the total number revised wholly in favour of the applicant; of the total number of applications for review to social fund officers in Sheffield how many were reviewed partially in favour of the applicant; and what number of applications for review by social fund officers in Sheffield had the original decision confirmed, giving all answers by district and by type of application.

Mr. Scott: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the total number of claimants who are currently in debt to the social fund in Sheffield and the total amount that is owed by them.

Mr. Scott: I understand from Mr. Michael Bichard, chief executive of the Benefits Agency, that the information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Disability

Sir John Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list all the statutory and departmental committees which advise him and his governmental colleagues on matters concerning the needs of disabled people.

Mr. Scott: The needs of disabled people can affect almost any aspect of life in the community, and therefore any advisory body may give advice on the needs of disabled people as part of a wider brief. In this Department, for example, the social security advisory committee looks at social security legislation some of which will affect people with disabilities. Issues affecting the needs of people with disabilities may also be considered through appropriate departmental and interdepartmental machinery as needed. Ministers may also seek advice on an ad hoc basis from non-statutory bodies.

The major statutory and departmental advisory committees primarily concerned with disability issues are:

Disabled Persons Transport Advisory Committee
Building Regulations Advisory Committee
Advisory Group on Rehabilitation
Industrial Injuries Advisory Council
War Pensions Committee
Attendance Allowance Board
Disability Living Allowance Board
Sheltered Employment Consultative Group
National Advisory Council on Employment of People with Disabilities
The 60 Committees for the Employment of People with Disabilities

Scotland

Building Standards Advisory Committee
Disability Research Committee
Committee on Special Educational Needs
Prosthetic Advisory Committee

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people have (a) 40 per cent. or more disability and (b) 80 per cent. or more disability and how many in each category are aged (i) 60 to 65, (ii) 65 to 70, (iii) 70 to 75 and (iv) over 75 years in Great Britain.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is not available.

Small Businesses

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what arrangements his Department has to assess proposals for regulations relating to occupational pensions and national insurance contributions and their effect on existing small firms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: The Department regularly consults with employers organisations including representatives of small firms. As part of the Government's deregulation initiative, the Department also carries out compliance cost assessments on new proposals in both these and other fields to identify any impact that they may have on businesses of all sizes.

Additionally, in the case of occupational pensions, there is a statutory duty to refer, with limited exceptions, proposals to make regulations to the Occupational Pensions Board. The board, in considering such proposals and reporting back, consults a number of representative bodies including the Confederation of British Industry.

Publicity

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list all the television advertising campaigns and all other publicity campaigns costing over £100,000 to be carried out by his Department in February, March, April, May or June of the current year.

Mr. Jack: Campaigns being carried out by the Department during this period are:

New disability benefits.
Change in hours rule for family credit and income support.
Advice to trustees of occupational pension schemes.

National Insurance

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the cost in 1991-92 and 1992-93 of abolishing the 2 per cent. rate of national insurance contributions on earnings below the lower earnings limit.

Mr. Jack: We estimate that the loss in revenue would be about £1 billion in both 1991-92 and 1992-93.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Social Fund

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many cases were referred to the social fund inspectors seeking a review of decisions made by social fund officers in each of the past two years.

Mr. Hanley: Social security operational matters are the responsibility of Mr. Alec Wylie, chief executive of the Social Security Agency. He will write to the hon. Gentleman and copies of his reply will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Electors

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the total number of electors in each (a) council area in Northern Ireland, (b) each parliamentary constituency in Northern Ireland, (c) the total for Northern Ireland, on the 1992 register of electors and (d) what are the areas of each constituency.

Radioactivity, Glenshane

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland by how many acres the designated area at Glenshane, County Londonderry has been reduced by Statutory order No. 527, 1991, what was the original level of radioactive contamination of the area now excluded and the present level of contamination; what was the original level of contamination and the present level of contamination of the area still under restriction; when he expects the remaining area to have its restrictions removed; what other areas in Northern Ireland and of what acreage are still under restrictions; when he expects those restrictions to be removed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: SR 1991 No. 527 reduced the restricted area at Glenshane, Co Londonderry, by approximately 568 acres. The highest level of radiocaesium recorded in sheep in the derestricted area of Glenshane before derestriction was 504 kg. No monitoring has been done in this area since derestriction. The highest level of contamination in sheep found in the area of Glenshane still under restriction, 3,723 kg, was recorded in 1987; the highest level recorded in 1991 was 1,289 kg. This apparent diminution in monitored levels must be interpreted with caution. The 1991 figure was recorded in sheep put forward for monitoring prior to movement out of the restricted area. These sheep are usually grazed on lower, clean pastures before monitoring resulting in lower levels being detected and cannot be taken as a true reflection of change in the situation in the upland areas.

Approximately 1,305 acres at Belraugh, Co Londonderry and 8,620 acres at Glenwherry, Co Antrim still remain under restriction. It is not possible to predict when the remaining restrictions will be removed. They will be lifted as soon as it is possible to do so without compromising the food chain.

National Insurance

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what would be the cost in 1991-92 and 1992-93 of abolishing the 2 per cent. rate of national insurance contributions on earnings below the lower earnings limit.

Mr. Hanley: The estimated costs are £23 million and £24 million, respectively.

Disability Statistics

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people have (a) 40 per cent. or more disability and (b) 80 per cent. or more disability; and how many in each category are aged (i) 60 to 65, (ii) 65 to 70, (iii) 70 to 75 and (iv) over 75 years in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Hanley: Social security operational matters are the responsibility of Mr. Alec Wylie, chief executive of the Social Security Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies of his reply will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Publicity

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list all the television advertising campaigns and all other publicity campaigns costing over £100,000 to be carried out by his Department in February, March, April, May or June of the current year.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information is as follows:

Cost	£100,000

Agricultural Property (Damage)

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he will list the incidents of malicious damage to agricultural property reported to the police since 1 January 1990.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 19 February 1992]: The information requested is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Written Answers to Questions

HOME DEPARTMENT

Fire Safety

Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what increase in fire service manpower he will require to deal with the obligations of the new building regulations and the removal of Crown immunity from health service bodies for initial fire inspection and ongoing monitoring; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The Government take account of additional burdens on local authorities in the revenue support grant settlement each year, but it is for fire authorities to determine their manpower establishments in the light of their statutory duties under the Fire Services Act 1947 and the Fire Precautions Act 1971. My Department is discussing with the local authority associations the additional resources required by fire authorities as a result of the removal of Crown immunity from health service bodies. Those associations have the opportunity to inform the Government of their views on local authority expenditure needs through the annual consultations on the local government finance settlement.

International Crime Surveys

Mr. Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the position of the United Kingdom in the figures produced for European countries in the international crime surveys for rape, robberies, assaults and murder.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The 1989 international crime survey, measuring crime in 1988, suggests that the robbery rate in England and Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland was lower than the western European average. The same was true of assaults. The survey provides no reliable figures for rape, but for sexual assaults generally the position of the United Kingdom was again low. The results of the survey are published in "Experience of Crime across the World: Key Findings from the 1989 International Crime Survey" which is in the Library.

The survey cannot by its nature cover murder, but in 1988 rates of homicide, and attempted homicide, recorded by the police were lower in England and Wales than in 10 other of the EC countries. Rates in Northern Ireland and Scotland were higher than elsewhere except Luxembourg.

Crime, Leicestershire

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department by what number, and by what percentage, reported (a) criminal offences and (b) crimes of violence have increased in Leicestershire since May 1979.

Mr. John Patten: The available information compares the 12 months to June 1979 with the 12 months to June 1991. Between these periods, the total of notifiable offences in Leicestershire increased by 52,906—29,481 to 82,387—offences and crimes of violence increased by 2,245 offences—1,823 to 4,068.

Safer Cities Programme

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will add Oxford to the areas covered by the safer cities programme.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: There are no plans at present to extend the safer cities programme beyond the current 20 projects. The objectives of the Home Office-funded safer cities programme are to reduce crime; lessen the fear of crime and create safer cities where economic enterprise and community life can flourish. We have now reached our target of 20 projects and there are no plans or resources at present to extend the programme any further.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the criteria for areas eligible for funding for crime research under the safer cities programme.

Mr. John Patten: Safer cities is a crime prevention initiative and not primarily a research programme. Areas were eligible for consideration for inclusion in the safer cities programme if they: (i) were districts, metropolitan districts or London boroughs within the urban programme; (ii) had serious crime and other social problems; (iii) were already the focus for Government action, and; (iv) were willing to participate. All 20 project areas in the current programme have been selected.

Oxfordshire Motor Project

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to take a decision on the application for funding by the Oxfordshire motor project.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We will announce a decision shortly.

Correspondence

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to respond to the letters of 4 November 1991 and 3 January 1992 from the hon. Member for Bradford, North concerning Mr. P. M. B. Fell of Lister Gardens, Bradford BD8 7AG.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: It appears that the hon. Member's letters were not received in the Home Office. I am sending the hon. Member a copy of the reply which went to Mr. Fell on 28 November 1991.

Low-Energy Lighting

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will make it his policy progressively to introduce low-energy lighting in all the buildings operated by his Department.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: It is the policy to install low-energy lighting and other energy-saving devices where practicable into all Home Office buildings.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will review the poll tax cases which resulted in imprisonment, where evidence had been used of the kind ruled out by the High Court on 20 February.

Mr. John Patten: No.

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department under what authority a magistrate can adjourn a case in anticipation of Parliament amending a law; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Magistrates courts have general powers to adjourn in both criminal and civil proceedings under the Magistrates Courts Act 1980.

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidance he has issued to magistrates and clerks of the court regarding the use of computer evidence in poll tax cases following the High Court decision of 20 February; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: I do not think that any further guidance is necessary following this case.

War Crimes

Mr. Cyril D. Townsend: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the estimated additional police expenditure associated with the War Crimes Act 1991 for each of the next three financial years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Additional police expenditure associated with the War Crimes Act is estimated as follows:

	£ million
1992-93	1·5
1993-94	1·7
1994-95	1·65

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Rabies

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will ensure that quarantine will continue to be a requirement in regard to the import of those species which are vulnerable to rabies until the rest of the European Community is declared to be free of rabies.

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has any plans to end rabies quarantine for dogs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Members to my reply of 24 February to my hon. Friend the Member for Southampton, Test (Mr. Hill).

Low-Energy Lighting

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will make it his policy progressively to introduce low-energy lighting in all the buildings operated by his Department.

Mr. Curry: It is the existing policy of the Department to carry out in its buildings all energy-saving measures which can be shown to be worthwhile. As a result of this, a substantial investment has already been made in energy-efficient lighting; this will be extended to other buildings wherever practicable and as resources allow.

East Anglia

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on his policy for the East Anglian farming industry in general and the livestock, dairy, cereals and poultry sectors in particular in the light of the single market opening.

Mr. Curry: The Government's policy for the United Kingdom farming industry as a whole is set out in the policy statement "Our Farming Future" launched by my right hon. Friends the Prime Minister and the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on 15 November.

Ozone Layer

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment his departmental plant pathologists have made of results for agriculture of changes in the ozone layer.

Mr. Curry: Against the background of the Department of the Environment's continuing programme of work on the effects of ozone depletion on plants, this Department is considering advertising for a research proposal on this matter.

ENVIRONMENT

Norman Shaw Buildings

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment why the power failed in the Norman Shaw buildings at 2.35 pm on 13 February; and what steps will be taken to prevent a recurrence.

Mr. Yeo: The power failure in the Norman Shaw buildings on 13 February which lasted for less than two seconds, was caused by a fault within the London Electricity supply network. There was insufficient time for the back-up generator system to be activated.

Business Property Values

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what mechanisms exist or are planned for review of rateable values for the uniform business rate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: All rateable values, including those currently prescribed by my right hon. Friend, will be reassessed in 1995. We have announced that the proposed valuation date for the revaluation is 1 April 1993. In preparation, a committee is also reviewing the rating of plant and machinery.

All assessments in current rating lists are based on a common valuation date of 1 April 1988. Any changes in relative values since that date will be taken into account at the next revaluation. All ratepayers had the right to challenge their individual assessments during the first six months of the current lists. They continue to have rights of challenge where there is a change of circumstances affecting a property and in certain other prescribed cases.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment under which Act the regulations in the poll tax reduction schemes were made.

Mr. Key: Section 13A of the Local Government Finance Act 1988, as inserted by the Local Government and Housing Act 1989.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the estimated revenue that will be received in 1991-92 from those who are required to pay 20 per cent. of their poll tax, in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Key [holding answer 24 February 1992]: The potential revenue in 1991-92 in Great Britain from those on maximum community charge benefit is £200 million and from students £34 million. Whilst information is held centrally on overall rates of collection by local authorities, no separate information is held on collection from those making the 20 per cent. contribution.

Nature Conservancy

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made on the recommendation from the former Nature Conservancy Council that a number of non-native species should be added to schedule 9 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981.

Mr. Trippier: Following recommendations made by the former Nature Conservancy Council and consultation with the Joint Nature Conservation Committee and other bodies, I have decided that we should add the following species to schedule 9 to the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981:

Animals

Noble crayfish
Signal crayfish
Turkish crayfish
Sika deer
New Zealand flatworm
Italian crested newt
Aesculapian snake

Plants

3 species of Giant kelp macrocystis angustifolia macrocystis integrifolia macrocystis laevis
Japanese kelp
Green seafingers
Californian red seaweed
Hooked asparagus seaweed
All non-native laver seaweeds
Wakame

I have placed an order before Parliament today which will bring these additions into effect on 16 March.

Tyre Tread Depths

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what provision is being made in landfill sites for the tipping of extra tyres as a result of the increase in minimum legal tyre tread depth; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: We are making no specific provision although the United Kingdom is participating in an EC waste management study group which is considering means of achieving higher scrap tyre retreading and recycling rates across the community. Whole tyres are difficult to deal with on landfill sites, and an increasing number are now being shredded before disposal, but disposal in landfill is currently a matter for local authority regulators, site operators and producers of waste tyres. It would be for these parties to consider any immediate consequences of changes in tread depth requirements.

Cleaning Contract, Waveney

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to announce a decision on the inquiries into the way Waveney district council assigned their buildings cleaning work contract to its own direct services organisation in March 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: Waveney district council's response to the notice served under section 13 of the Local Government Act 1988 is being considered. My right hon. Friend expects to announce his decision shortly.

Electronic Equipment (Recycling)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will obtain for his departmental library a copy of the recently published report, "End-of-Life Electronic Equipment: The Case for Recycling", prepared by the Centre for Exploitation of Science and Technology.

Mr. Baldry: The Library has a copy on order.

Low-Energy Lighting

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make it his policy progressively to introduce low-energy lighting in all the buildings operated by his Department.

Mr. Baldry: My Department's policy relating to the installation of low-energy lighting is to replace all standard luminaires, both tungsten and fluorescent, with low-energy consuming equivalents, wherever this is practicable and cost-effective. A programme of lighting replacement is in progress and low-energy lighting has already been installed in six major buildings representing about 60 per cent. of my Department's office estate.

Disabled People (Access)

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if advice on access arrangements for disabled people will be included in the published version of Planning Policy Guidance Note 1; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: We want to encourage the design and construction of new buildings that provide adequately for the needs of disabled people. Development control policy note 16, published in 1985, set out the role of local planning authorities in seeking to achieve that objective. It emphasised the need for the local planning authority and the developer to discuss the arrangements proposed for meeting the needs of disabled people, as one aspect of negotiation over planning applications. It also made clear that the role of the planning system in this context is limited. This is because the internal layout and design of buildings are not normally material to planning applications.

Part M of the building regulations imposes requirements on the design and construction of new non-domestic buildings, so that reasonable access and facilities for disabled people can be secured. Where the requirements of part M apply, planning legislation should not normally be used to impose separate requirements. This is because the internal standards of building construction are best regulated by means of a national code, so that developers know what to expect irrespective of the local authority area in which they are building. The building regulations do not yet extend to internal requirements for disabled people in new buildings. My Department is currently assessing the scope and timing of such an extension, which it hopes to implement next year.

In the interim, we welcome action by local authorities to bring the needs of disabled people in new housing development to the attention of developers, but it would not be right for individual authorities to spend time designing alternative standards, and seeking to impose these through local or unitary development plans, or through planning conditions. However, where there is clear evidence of local need, a local planning authority could include in a local plan a policy indicating that it would seek to negotiate elements of housing accessible to the disabled on suitable sites.

The Government consulted on new guidance on access and the planning system in an annex to the draft Planning Policy Guidance Note 1, issued for public consultation on 1 October 1991. In view of the current work on part M of the building regulations, we have concluded that it would not be appropriate to include detailed guidance which would be soon out of date in the final version of PPG1 to be published shortly. Instead, we propose to issue a circular in due course on access requirements which will take account of progress on this issue.

Revenue Support Grant

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the actual or estimated total of all debt charges by the charging authorities receiving revenue support grant; and if he will state the reasons for the difference between this sum and the sum of £2,469,200,000 ascribed to debts charges in Annex B of HC 190 of 1991-92.

Mr. Key [holding answer 21 February 1992]: Charging authorities budgeted for debt charges of £2,328 million in 1991-92. This is not comparable with the sum of £2,469,200,000 shown in annex B of HC 190, which relates to both charging and precepting authorities, and represents the net provision for debt charges in 1992-93 after capital financing grants have been taken into account.

Plutonium

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps have been taken to monitor the ecological suspension of plutonium in the environment arising from the atmospheric distribution of plutonium in the accident at Sellafield on 19 June 1961.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 24 February 1992]: Details of this incident were provided to the Windscale inquiry in 1977 and in information supplied to Sir Douglas Black's independent advisory group's investigations in 1984 into the incident of leukaemias. Monitoring of radionuclides in the environment was initiated in 1952 and their transfer from one environmental medium to another has been the subject of detailed investigation.

WALES

Child Refugees

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what financial support he is providing to child refugees in Cardiff.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Refugee matters are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary. Services provided by health and local authorities are not in general differentiated by status of user and it is not possible separately to identify funding provided by the Department for services to child refugees from wider support for services for children. Urban programme funding of some £394,000 has however been approved in South Glamorgan since 1989-90 for projects directed towards the needs of refugees; it is likely that children will have benefited.

Speech Therapy

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what level of resources have been allocated for speech therapy for children in Wales and in Gwent with a formal statement of needs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: This information is not available centrally. The provision of speech therapy services is primarily a matter for the individual health authority to deliver in light of competing demands on available resources.

A predicted national shortage of trained speech therapists has been identified for which the Department has made funding of £62,000 available to the health authorities to sponsor ten speech therapy students placements. In addition, the Scientific Staffs Whitley Council has introduced a more flexible pay and grading structure to help overcome local problems of recruitment and retention.

A48

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to make an announcement regarding his proposals to introduce a crawler lane for the A48 at Hardwick hill, Chepstow; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Gwent county council, as agent, is currently considering several options for the improvement of Hardwick Hill on its existing alignment. To confirm the feasibility of each of these options further studies have to be carried out. It is not possible to predict when an announcement will be made until the results of these studies are evaluated.

Livestock Exports

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many livestock exporters have been prosecuted in 1991 for breach of the welfare code for export of live animals to the EC; and what were the corresponding figures for the last five years.

Mr. David Hunt: This information is not available centrally.

School Repairs

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many school buildings were assessed as being in need of fundamental repair in the years 1987, 1988, 1989, 1990 and 1991.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Local education authorities are responsible for the repair and maintenance of their school buildings and this information is not held centrally.

Development Initiatives

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what evaluation he has carried out of the (a) Swansea bay initiative, (b) valleys initiative, (c) information technology initiative, (d) financial services initiative and (e) road to opportunity initiative; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: The information is as follows.

The valleys initiative launched in 1986 by Mr. Nicholas Edwards, now Lord Crickhowell, was evaluated in 1988 by the department of town planning, UWIST, Cardiff. Progress on the programme for the valleys, launched by my predecessor in 1988, is monitored at six-monthly intervals. Reports are published regularly; the most recent was on 19 February 1992. I will consider the most appropriate form of evaluation when the programme ends in March 1993.

The financial services initiative, the Swansea Bay partnership and IT Wales are initiatives organised by local authorities, the private sector and the Welsh Development Agency, which are intended to help promote inward investment. It is primarily for the partners concerned to evaluate progress. Based on information provided by companies at the time of their decision to invest, 151 inward investment projects have been recorded for Wales so far this financial year. These projects promise more than 14,000 new and safeguarded jobs and include eight projects in financial services, 12 in information technology and 19 in Swansea bay.

My right hon. Friend the Minister of State, announced on 11 December 1991 his intention to launch a review of the "A55—Road of Opportunity". The review is proceeding.

Low-Energy Lighting

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will make it his policy progressively to introduce low-energy lighting in all the buildings operated by his Department.

Mr. David Hunt: It is already my Department's policy to introduce low-energy lighting where it is feasible and economic to do so.

Cardiff Royal Infirmary

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the future of the Cardiff royal infirmary following the rejection of the application to pursue trust status.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The future of the hospital is a matter initially for the South Glamorgan health authority. No application for NHS trust status has been made. The position is that following the expression of interest submitted by the Cardiff Royal group of hospitals, the decision whether to invite a formal application was deferred pending the outcome of the strategic review announced by the South and Mid Glamorgan health authorities.

Hospitals

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list those decisions already made on hospital reorganisation or closures which have been deferred from being announced in February, March or April (a) by his Department and (b) by each district health authority in Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: None.

Young Offenders

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much secure accommodation is available in Wales for persistent young offenders; and what representations he has received about his current proposals on the subject.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: No secure accommodation is available in Wales for persistent young offenders. The three existing small secure units are suitable for short-term use only.

On 14 August 1991, I published proposals for a comprehensive strategy to tackle this problem emphasising the development of alternatives to secure accommodation as well as proposing a new all-Wales facility. There has been a general endorsement of the report and its recommendations and responses have included additional comments and suggestions which will now be taken forward for discussion with a consortium of relevant authorities. Some of the recommendations contained in the report for Welsh Office action are already in hand or have been actioned, for example a review of conditions of use of the existing secure units in Wales. I have also considered applications for funding special initiatives aimed at avoiding the need for young people to be placed in secure accommodation. Two successful applications have already been announced and I hope to announce a third later in the year.

Adult Students

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many adult students have been, or are at present on access courses leading to higher education during the years 1989-90, 1990-91, and 1991-92 in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The number of students aged 19 and over, recorded by colleges of higher and further education as being on access courses, was 123 in 1989-90 and 503 in 1990-91. Information for 1991-92 is not yet available.

Health Promotion Authority

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the budget for the Health Promotion Authority for Wales in 1992-93.

Mr. David Hunt: Subject to parliamentary approval, in 1992-93 a total of £2,830,000 will be made available for the authority's core allocation, and a further £355,000 will be allocated for new projects. An additional £29,000 will be available as a further earmarked reserve to meet the cost of the authority's contribution to the family planning information service, and in addition £20,000 will be available to fund the authority's capital expenditure. Finally, for 1992-93 only, the Department will make a further £126,000 available for the authority's life education centres project. The allocation will be conditional upon satisfactory completion of annual performance review. It represents a further and substantial commitment of resources to the authority.

Food (Self-sufficiency)

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the level of self-sufficiency of Wales in (a) fish, (b) mutton and lamb, (c) poultrymeat, (d) beef, (e) oats, (f) cheese, (g) liquid milk, (h) barley, (i) potatoes, (j) pigmeat, (k) eggs, (l) wheat and (m) butter and what were the equivalent figures for 1988, 1989, 1990 and 1991.

Mr. David Hunt [holding answer 13 February 1992]: Estimates of the level of self sufficiency, defined as the ratio of production to consumption, are given in the table. The consumption figures, which are taken from the results of the national food survey, are based on a sample size of 480 households in Wales. The self-sufficiency ratios will therefore be subject to significant estimation errors. Information is not yet available in respect of 1991.

	Self-sufficiency (production/consumption)
	1988	1989	1990
(a) fish		[2]n.a.
(b) mutton and lamb	4·9	[1]—	4·4
(c) poultrymeat	2·0	1·9	1·6
(d) beef	3·6	[1]—	4·0
(e) oats		[2]n.a.
(f) cheese	2·1	2·1	2·4
(g) liquid milk	3·5	3·4	3·3
(h) barley		[2]n.a.
(i) potatoes	0·9	0·7	0·7
(j) pigmeat	0·5	0·6	0·4
(k) eggs	0·8	0·9	0·9
(l) wheat		[2]n.a.
(m) butter	1·3	1·6	1·9

[1]Self-sufficiency ratios for mutton and lamb and beef have not been calculated for 1989 as the relevant per capita consumption data for Wales are not regarded as reliable.
[2]Not available.

Empty Council Houses

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the number of unoccupied council houses in Wales in the years 1987, 1988, 1989, 1990 and 1991.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett [holding answer 24 February 1992]: The information requested is given in the table:

Local authority vacant dwellings[1]

[2] Includes 42 dwellings from transferred Cwmbran stock.
[3] Prior to 1986 this figure includes vacant dwellings awaiting repair or improvements prior to 1986. The figure for 1986 includes 82 dwellings in the transferred Cwmbran stock for which no breakdown between dwellings undergoing or awaiting repair or improvement is available. Figures after 1990 represent the total number of dwellings to be let after repairs.
[4] Excludes New Towns. Cwmbran ceased to be designated as a New Town on 1 April 1986 at which date its stock was transferred to Torfaen and is included in local authority stock since 1986.

This information was published in "Welsh Housing Statistics No. 11, 1991", a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Homelessness

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many homeless people there were in Wales by district council area in the years, 1987, 1988, 1989, 1990 and 1991.

THE ARTS

Departmental Staff

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Minister for the Arts what is the total number of employees in the Office of Arts and Libraries; and how many are (a) black and (b) disabled.

Mr. Renton: The Office of Arts and Libraries has currently 59 members of staff. Equal opportunities policy is monitored on an on-going basis in the Department.

All staff are asked to complete a questionnaire on their ethnic origins but individuals are not obliged to return them. Currently, three respondents to the questionnaire have declared they are members of the ethnic minorities. One member of staff in the Department is currently registered as disabled, but there may be others with disabilities who have chosen not to register.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will publish a table showing the number of (a) men and (b) women in his office in each of grades (i) 1, (ii) 2, (iii) 3, (iv) 4, (v) 5, (vi) 6, (vii) 7, (viii) SEO, (ix) HEO, (x) administrative trainee, (xi) EO, (xii) CO and (xiii) CA.

Mr. Renton: The current number of men and women in the Office of Arts and Libraries in grades 2, 5, 6, 7, SEO, HEO, HEO(D), EO, AO and AA is as follows. The Department does not employ anyone at grades 1, 3 and 4.

ENERGY

Low-Energy Lighting

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he will make it his policy progressively to introduce low-energy lighting in all the buildings operated by his Department.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Low-energy lighting is installed in major areas of the Department's headquarters building, 1 Palace street, which accounts for some 85 per cent. of its energy use. Further installations are under active consideration.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Stock Exchange Investment

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the yield from capital gains on the sale of stock exchange investment by individuals (a) cashing in and (b) reinvesting, in 1988-89 and 1990-91.

Mr. Maude: Total net capital gains tax liabilities of individuals and trusts are estimated to be:

1988-89 liabilities—£2,000 million
1990-91 liabilities—£1,150 million.

Table 12.6 of "Inland Revenue Statistics 1991", which provides an analysis of net chargeable gains on 1988-89 disposals broken down by type of asset, suggests that about a quarter of the 1988-89 liability is attributable to ordinary shares quoted on the London stock exchange. A comparable analysis of 1990-91 liabilities is not yet available.

Finer analysis to isolate the amount of gains where the proceeds are reinvested is not available, but from the evidence which is available, it is thought that more of the tax liability from quoted shares will arise from disposals where the proceeds are reinvested than where the proceeds are used for other purposes.

The figures quoted exclude gains made by companies included in corporation tax.

Taxpayers

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the reduction in annual liability to capital gains tax, in 1991-92 and 1992-93 as against the 1978-79 indexed regime specifying in each case the total and average reduction per taxpayer as well as the number of taxpayers in each year, in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Maude: Estimates of the difference between the CGT liability on the current regime and on the 1978-79 indexed regime are not available, as indicated in my reply to the hon. Member on 15 March 1991, Official Report, columns 704-5.

Latest available estimates of taxpayer numbers for capital gains tax for 1991-92 and 1992-93, assuming statutory indexation of the annual exempt amount, excluding gains realised by companies, which are included in assessments to corporation tax, are:

Liabilities	Thousands
1991-92	105
1992-93	90

Debtor Countries

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the Government will encourage commercial banks to make a response to debtor countries comparable with that of Governments through the Trinidad terms.

Mr. Maples: The Government's position is that whenever the Paris club grants Trinidad arrangements, it should insist that the debtor seeks similar treatment from other creditors. The Government have also supported proposals for limited use of IMF and World bank resources to support voluntary agreements on debt relief between debtors and banks. But the final decisions on relief concerning these commercial debts must be made by the banks and is a matter for their commercial judgment.

PRIME MINISTER

Magnetic Resonance Imaging Scanners

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Prime Minister what discussions have been held to seek joint purchases of MRI scanners by the Northern Ireland health authorities with the Departments of Health in Scotland and England.

The Prime Minister: No approaches have been made to health authorities in England about the purchase of MRI scanners. However, the Northern Ireland health and personal social services management executive is shortly to establish a new regionally managed supplies organisation which will be expected to seek opportunities for greater savings by co-operating with other supplies agencies in the United Kingdom.

The Scottish Health Common Services Agency has already placed an order for a number of MRIs—and it is therefore not possible for the Northern Ireland authorities to join with Scotland at this stage.

Exchange Rate Policy

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister, further to his letter dated 13 February to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby on the effect of exchange rate policy, what assessment has been made of the effect on pricing out of overseas markets of United Kingdom exports, and the pricing into domestic markets of imports, of increases in the real value of the pound sterling; and if he will publish a table showing the changes in the indices of import and export values of manufactures as a consequence of each quinquennial change in the statistical base.

The Prime Minister: The Government cannot determine the real exchange rate over the medium term. The crucial factor determining competitiveness is the effectiveness of United Kingdom producers in controlling their costs. Value indices of trade in manufacturing are not published.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister (1) further to his letter dated 13 February to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby, whether he will distinguish those periods in the last 25 years in which Her Majesty's Government assess the pound sterling to have been (a) overvalued and (b) undervalued;

(2) if he will give the figures underlying the statement in his letter to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby of 13 February that the central rate at which the pound sterling entered the ERM was close to the pound sterling's average real rate over the previous 25 years.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the Treasury bulletin for winter 1990-91 volume 2, issue 1, pages 25-32 which analyses "measures of real exchange rates and competitiveness", in particular chart 4 on page 31 shows the real sterling exchange rate against other ERM countries and the long run average 1966 to 1990.

Exports

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will publish a table showing, for each of the years 1965 to 1991, the Department of Trade and Industry and the International Monetary Fund indices of trade-weighted relative export unit values base on the second half of 1973=100, estimated where necessary on the basis of movements in the rate of exchange since the quarter in which the figures for other countries were last made available.

The Prime Minister: The Department of Trade and Industry does not produce a relative export unit value series. The information from the International Monetary Fund series is in the table. Data for 1991 are not available.

United Kingdom relative[1] export unit value index—UVI—for manufactured goods

	Value
1979	119·9
1980	134·0
1981	131·5
1982	123·7
1983	120·4
1984	117·6
1985	119·7
1986	116·9
1987	121·5
1988	131·8
1989	124·6
1990	129·1

[1] United Kingdom's UVI of manufactured goods compared with an export-weighted average of 16 major competitors, in common currency.

Manufactures

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister, further to his letter dated 13 February to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby, what criteria he uses in judging whether United Kingdom manufactures are fully competitive at home and overseas.

The Prime Minister: A number of indicators of competitiveness are readily available in, for example, the "Monthly Review of External Trade Statistics". But the underlying competitiveness of United Kingdom manufacturers is best demonstrated by the United Kingdom's rising share of world trade over the last three years, as shown by the chart on page 62 of the Autumn Statement.

Pelagic Fish

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Prime Minister (1) if he will make an assessment of the implications for the pelagic fishing industry of the collapse of markets in eastern Europe and the Commonwealth of Independent States; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will make a statement on the discussions held with President Yeltsin concerning supplies of pelagic fish to Russian and other Commonwealth of Independent States markets;

(3) what progress he has made following his discussions with President Yeltsin in establishing pelagic fish as part of the European Community food aid programme to eastern Europe and the Commonwealth of Independent States; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Disruption of the long-established trade with Russia and other members of the Commonwealth of Independent States could have serious implications for the Scottish pelagic fishing industry, even though they have been making commendable efforts to find other market outlets. The possibility that pelagic fish might be included in the EC's food aid programme or credit guarantee scheme is being explored by Departments, including in contacts with the Russian authorities. So far, no request for assistance of this type has been received from Russia.

Low-Energy Lighting

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Prime Minister whether he will make it his policy progressively to introduce low-energy lighting in all the offices used in connection with his offices of state.

The Prime Minister: Following an energy audit of 10 to 12 Downing street, high-efficiency, low-energy lamps have been installed where appropriate. Low-energy luminaires and krypton tubes have also been installed.

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 25 February.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Gibraltar (Homosexuals)

Mr. Norris: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to ensure that the requirements of article 8 of the European convention on human rights apply to homosexual acts between consenting adults in Gibraltar.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The European convention on human rights applies in Gibraltar and its laws must, therefore, comply with the convention's provisions. To meet the particular requirement of article 8 of the convention, the Gibraltar Government have drafted an amendment to their criminal offences ordinance. We are considering this.

Nuclear Non-proliferation

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the United Kingdom, as a depositary state for the nuclear non-proliferation treaty, received a copy of the safeguards agreement deposited with the International Atomic Energy Agency on 30 January by the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, pursuant to North Korea's obligations under the nuclear non-proliferation treaty.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United Kingdom's status as a depositary power for the treaty on the non-proliferation of nuclear weapons—NPT—does not of itself entitle us to receive copies of safeguards agreements negotiated by the International Atomic Energy Agency with states parties to the NPT. However, as a member of the IAEA board of governors the United Kingdom has received a copy of the minor amendments to the standard full scope safeguards text agreed between the IAEA and the North Koreans.

BBC World Service

Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessments he has made of the quality of the BBC World Service broadcasts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The BBC World Service's reputation for the high quality, accuracy and impartiality of its broadcasts is well established and fully merited. The World Service attracts the largest audience of any international broadcaster, estimated at more than 120 million regular listeners.

We continue to place great value on the World Service and the benefits it brings to Britain's international reputation.

Afghanistan

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will seek to restore diplomatic relations with Afghanistan; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Diplomatic relations with Afghanistan have not been broken. The Afghan embassy in London continues to function under a chargé d'affaires. British diplomats were withdrawn from Kabul in February 1989 because of the uncertain security situation. We have no present plans to reopen the embassy.

Croatia

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Southend, East (Sir T. Taylor) of 5 February, Official Report, columns 190-91, if he will list the undertakings given by the Croatian Government on minorities legislation; and what plans he has to monitor their implementation.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Croatian Government have stated their full acceptance of the provisions in the draft treaty prepared by Lord Carrington on the rights of national minorities and an autonomy for areas in which persons belonging to a national or ethnic group form a majority. We are pressing for the implementation of these provisions in Croatian legislation.

Baltic States

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment Her Majesty's Government have undertaken of the extent to which each of the Baltic states is respecting the rights of all residents in full accordance with international requirements of respect for human rights, without regard to race, religion and colour.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Baltic States are members of the conference on security and co-operation in Europe and have therefore undertaken to abide by the human rights provisions of that agreement. In our political dialogue with the Baltic states, we make clear whenever appropriate the importance we attach to human rights.

Lithuania

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the borders of Lithuania as currently recognised by Her Majesty's Government; and what is the historical basis for that recognition.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The borders of Lithuania are those within which the former Soviet Republic of Lithuania existed de facto at the time of our recognition of the Republic of Lithuania as an independent state, in August 1991.

Low-Energy Lighting

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make it his policy progressively to introduce low-energy lighting in all the buildings operated by his Department.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: It is already the policy of both diplomatic and aid wings of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office progressively to install energy-efficient lighting in their buildings.

Abortion

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will urge the Government of Ireland to change the anti-abortion provision in its constitution; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: The Irish Supreme Court is considering how article 40.3.3 of the Irish constitution should be applied. It would not be right for the British Government to intervene.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Commonwealth of Independent States

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the estimated cost of the airlift of food to the Commonwealth of Independent States to (a) Britain and (b) all donors.

Mrs. Chalker: British beef flown to St. Petersburg at the turn of the year formed part of the European Community's 200 mecu food aid package. All transportation costs are being met from this allocation. No other significant airlifts of food from Britain have taken place.

The British Government have no figures for costs incurred by other countries in airlifting food to the former Soviet Union.

Development Assistance

Mr. Lester: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give the amounts of official development assistance allocated as bilateral aid in the sectors of primary health, primary education, rural water supply and family planning in the years 1974 to the present, including financial aid and technical co-operation.

Mrs. Chalker: Figures prior to 1980 are not available. Bilateral aid expenditure for the period 1980 to 1990 was as follows:

United Kingdom bilateral aid expenditure on primary health, primary education, rural water supply and family planning 1980-1990 (cash prices)[1,2]

£ thousands

	Primary education	Primary health[3]	Family planning	Rural water supply
1980	171	4,134	886	1,609
1981	419	730	283	1,518
1982	119	1,868	1,829	1,246
1983	128	4,195	3,794	557
1984	614	2,939	2,747	742
1985	384	3,586	2,439	1,280
1986	509	2,041	1,520	53,918
1987	723	752	686	7,601
1988	1,425	5,891	1,746	7,826
1989	1,071	5,264	1,115	10,006
1990	1,678	15,026	6,232	3,718

[1] Figures refer to the primary sector which benefits from any expenditure. They exclude expenditure classified to other sectors which may also benefit the primary sector (e.g. expenditure on primary teacher training may be classified under teacher training, not primary education).
[2] Technical cooperation expenditure is not included for 1980-87.
[3] Includes family planning.

Note: Figures include Project Aid provided by the Commonwealth Development Corporation.

Health Care Projects

Mr. Lester: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give the amounts of official development assistance allocated as bilateral project aid in the primary health care sector for the years 1974 to the present.

Mrs. Chalker: Figures prior to 1980 are not available. Bilateral project aid expenditure, excluding technical co-operation, for the period 1980 to 1990 was as follows:

Year	Expenditure (£ thousands)
1980	4,134
1981	730
1982	1,868
1983	4,195
1984	2,939
1985	3,586
1986	2,041
1987	752
1988	2,575
1989	844
1990	9,308

Note: Includes expenditure on family planning.

Workers' Co-operatives

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) how many projects involving the development of workers' co-operatives in the third world have commenced since 1988, by year;

(2) what is the total amount of money invested in the development and setting up of workers' co-operatives in the third world since 1988, by year.

Mrs. Chalker: Comprehensive statistics on aid to workers' co-operatives are not separately maintained and cannot readily or accurately be extracted. A number of projects financed under country programmes have, during the period, included significant elements supporting workers' co-operatives, for example the rural development project in Bangladesh, the co-operatives and rural business development training project in Vanuatu and the handicraft marketing project in Zimbabwe. Other projects will have include smaller components for workers' co-operatives.

Assistance has also been provided under the joint funding scheme. The number and cost of projects approved since 1988 which were primarily concerned with workers' co-operatives were:

	Number	Cost (£)
1988-89	3	9,000
1989-90	6	31,000
1990-91	6	57,900
1991-92	3	10,700

In other cases, support for workers' co-operatives will have formed a smaller part of the project.

In addition to project support, an annual average of three members of workers' co-operatives have, since 1988, been given awards to attend courses at the international co-operative training centre at Loughborough.

HEALTH

NHS Overseas Ltd

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when NHS Overseas Services Ltd. was set up; what its objectives are; whether its mission statement and business plan have been placed in the Library; how many staff it employs and at what grade; and what its cost in 1992-93 is expected to be.

Mr. Dorrell: I have arranged for the Chairman of NHS Overseas Enterprises to write to the hon. Member; a copy of the letter will be placed in the Library.

GP Complaints

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals he has to speed up the family practitioner committee complaints system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: On 2 April 1990 the Government introduced changes to speed up and simplify the family health services complaints system. We are presently considering the scope for Family Health Services Authorities to improve the administration of the complaints procedures.

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has any plans to publicise statistics of complaints received by family practitioner committees and the General Medical Council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: Statistics on the number of formal investigations into complaints by Family Health Services Authorities are published annually in "Health and Personal Social Services Statistics", copies of which are available in the Library.

The General Medical Council is an independent statutory body whose procedures are governed by the 1983 Medical Act. A summary of complaints received and considered by the council is published by it annually.

King's College Hospital (Death)

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will institute an inquiry into the death of Frederick Seymour at King's college hospital, London SE5, at the accident and emergency department, following the remarks of the coroner at the inquest on the deceased.

Mr. Dorrell: The regional health authority has set up an external inquiry to investigate this tragic incident.

Hospitals (Parking)

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidelines are issued to health authorities regarding the imposition of car parking charges for patients, visitors or staff at national health service hospitals.

Mr. Dorrell: No such guidance has been issued, as this is a matter for local determination.

No-fault Compensation

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment his Department has made of the working of no-fault compensation schemes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: No full assessment has been made of the working of no-fault compensation schemes, although the Department has noted developments in Scandinavian countries and New Zealand. The question of no-fault compensation was fully debated last year during the NHS (Compensation) Bill. The House decided on a free vote against the measure and the Bill did not receive a Second Reading.

Medical Training

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the implications for his Department of the December High Court ruling in respect of the Joint Committee on Higher Medical Training; if he has any plans to revise the arrangements by which the General Medical Council delegates to the medical royal colleges the regulation of post graduate medical training leading to United Kingdom accreditation; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: An appeal has been lodged against the High Court ruling and we would not wish to comment until the outcome of the appeal is known.

Prescriptions

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health for each NHS region and health district what was (a) the total number of prescriptions and (b) the total number of prescriptions that incurred charges in 1988 and 1991; and if he will express the latter as a percentage of the former.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Information for 1988-89 is not available. Information for the financial years 1989-90 and 1990-91 is in the table.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether a chronic asthmatic on invalidity benefit and in receipt of housing benefits and poll tax benefit but below pensionable age is entitled to free prescriptions.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Since 1968, when medical exemptions from prescription charges were first introduced, asthma has not been a condition which of itself attracts free prescriptions. The NHS low income scheme underpins wide-ranging exemption arrangements on grounds of health or status, thus ensuring that no one need be deterred from obtaining any necessary medication for financial reasons.

As a result of the exemption and charge remission arrangements, coupled with the prescription prepayment certificate scheme, less than one item in six dispensed in the NHS attracts a charge. In 1991 100 million more items were dispensed free than in 1979, when one in three attracted a charge.

Departmental Staff

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total number of employees in his Department; and how many are (a) black and (b) disabled.

Mr. Dorrell: As at 3 February 1992, there were 4,511[1] people employed by the Department of Health of whom 539[2] were of ethnic minority origin. As at January 1992, 85[3] members of staff were registered disabled. A survey early in 1991 identified a further 61 additional members of staff with a disability who were not registered disabled.

Notes:

[1] Figure obtained from the Department's payroll held by the Information and Technology Systems Agency.

[2] Figure based on questionnaires voluntarily completed by staff.

[3] Figure obtained from the Personnel Computer System which does not include four people on the sheltered placement scheme.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish a table showing the number of (a) men and (b) women in his Department in each of the grades (i) 1, (ii) 2, (iii) 3, (iv) 4, (v) 5, (vi) 6, (vii) 7, (viii) SEO, (ix) HEO, (x) administrative trainee, (xi) EO, (xii) CO and (xiii) CA.

Medical Doctors

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any plans to increase the statutory protection for the title "doctor" as applied in the medical field.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Statutory protection already exists. Any person who wilfully and falsely uses any title, including that of "doctor of medicine", implying that he is registered as a medical practitioner under the Medical Act 1983 is guilty of an offence under section 49 of that Act.

Population Statistics

Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish the estimated population of (a) the United Kingdom, (b) England, (c) Greater London, (d) outer London, (e) inner London, (f) Manchester, (g) Liverpool, (h) Birmingham, (i) Leeds, (j) Sheffield, (k) Bristol and (l) Glasgow in 1961, 1971, 1981 and 1991.

"Confronting Elder Abuse"

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he proposes to take on the report of the social services inspectorate "Confronting Elder Abuse".

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The report is the result of the first phase of a project being undertaken by the social services inspectorate. It describes how staff in two social services authorities responded to referrals about elder abuse in domestic settings. The inspectorate is now working to produce guidance on standards as part of our work programme implementing care in the community and improving standards in service provision for the elderly.

Low-Energy Lighting

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will make it his policy progressively to introduce low-energy lighting in all the buildings operated by his Department.

Mr. Dorrell: It is already the policy and practice of the Department to introduce low-energy lighting as part of its pursuit of improved energy efficiency.

Abortion

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals he has discussed with his EC counterparts for the harmonisation of provision for abortion within the Community; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No such proposals have come forward. Arrangements in respect of abortion are the responsibility of each member state.

DEFENCE

Radiation Exposure

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library statistical information about the radiation doses received by (a) service personnel and (b) civilian workers during refits of the Resolution class submarines.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Radiation dose information is not available in the form requested.

Suicides

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence in how many Army regiments there were no suicides in the years 1987 to 1991; and in how many there were more than one suicide.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: In the five years 1987-1991 there were no suicides in 33 regiments and six corps of the Regular Army. In the same period there has been more than one suicide in nine corps and eight regiments.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will make it his policy that all reports of investigations into suicides are examined centrally, that all regiments where there are more than two suicides a year are visited by an independent investigator and that an annual report is made to Parliament on forces' suicides; (2) if he will investigate whether bullying was a factor in any suicide in the armed forces.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: All suicides in the armed forces are thoroughly investigated and there are no plans to change present procedures. Investigations completed into suicides committed since 1987 do not show bullying to have been a factor. Statistical information on suicides is contained in the report on "Annual Health Tables: Royal Navy, Army and Royal Air Force". Arrangements have been made to place the reports for 1990 and future years in the Library of the House.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give for the (a) Royal Navy and Royal Marines, (b) the Army and (c) the Royal Air Force for each of the years 1987 to 1991 (i) the number of suicides and (ii) the number of personnel; and if he will express the suicides as the number per 100,000 personnel.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces will write to the right hon. Member.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will detail the investigatory procedure that is carried out when a suicide occurs in the Army.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The suspected suicide of a member of the Army in the United Kingdom would be the subject of a coroner's inquest. The coroner would expect to receive a report on an investigation of the case by the civil police assisted where appropriate by the special investigation branch—SIB—of the Royal Military police.

Suspected suicides of military personnel overseas are investigated by the SIB. A copy of any SIB report is invariably given to the commanding officer of the unit concerned.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 27 January, Official Report, columns 454-56, if he will investigate the reasons for the level of suicides in the Royal Engineers and the Royal Electrical and Mechanical Engineers.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No. The level of suicides in the Royal Engineers and the Royal Electrical and Mechanical Engineers is not significantly higher than in other parts of the Army.

Search and Rescue

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will complete his review of search and rescue facilities prior to 9 April.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is not yet possible to say when the review will be completed.

Low-Energy Lighting

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will make it his policy progressively to introduce low-energy lighting in all the buildings operated by his Department.

Nuclear Non-proliferation

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what measures his Department is taking to prevent the proliferation and deployment of anti-ballistic missiles around the world.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Transfers of anti-missile missiles and related technology from the United Kingdom are subject to rigorous national export controls. Such systems or elements of them may also be subject to the international missile technology control regime. United States and Russian ABM deployments are subject to the 1972 ABM treaty.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has any plans either to develop or to reduce the range facilities at Balivanich, Benbecula.

Trident

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what criteria his Department will apply in determining the level at which the United Kingdom's strategic nuclear warheads will be deployed on the Trident fleet.

Mr. Alan Clark: Trident will deploy the minimum number of warheads necessary to provide effective deterrence, presenting the prospect of damage that no aggressor could find acceptable.

Mr. Jackson: The Employment Service is conducting a review into the arrangements for current and capital funding for both the sheltered placement scheme and sheltered workshops. The review was proposed in the consultative document "Employment and Training for People with Disabilities" and received widespread support. Proposals for new arrangements will be put for consultation as soon as possible.

Employment Action

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the best information he has, for each region and for Great Britain as a whole, separately for male and female, showing how many people have entered employment action and how many were participating in employment action in December 1991 and in January and February 1992.

Mr. Jackson: The tables show the number of people receiving employment action allowances as at each count date, plus the number starting to receive an allowance in the month ending at each count date. Employment Service

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) for each region and for Great Britain as a whole, how many unemployed people have been referred to restart courses by employment service counsellors since June 1991; how many of them were unemployed for over two years; how many attended and completed the course; what were the outcomes of the participants; how many had benefit penalties imposed for not attending or failing to complete their attendance at the restart course; and if he will make a statement;

(2) for each region and for Great Britain as a whole, how many unemployed people have taken part in the job interview guarantee scheme since September 1991; and how many participants have secured full-time employment with their sponsoring employer;

(3) how many people, for each region and for Great Britain as a whole, have attended a restart interview since 1 April 1991; and what were the results of those interviews, broken down in the same way as the reply given in his answer to the hon. Member for Pendle (Mr. Lee) of 18 December 1990, Official Report, column 148;

(4) for each region and for Great Britain as a whole, since September 1991, how many people have joined job clubs; how many have left; how many leavers got jobs; how many entered another positive outcome; and if he will give the information broken down by the ethnic origin and gender of participants;

(5) for each region and for Great Britain as a whole, how many unemployed people have participated in job interview guarantee work trials since September 1991; and how many participants have got full-time employment with their work trial employer.

Mr. Jackson: Questions on operational matters in the Employment Service executive agency are the responsibility of Mike Fogden, the agency's chief executive, to whom I have referred this question for reply.

Lone Parents (Training)

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his best estimate, for Great Britain, for each region and for each TEC or LEC, of the number of employment training trainees who are lone parents and have entered the scheme under the lone parent eligibility route; how many are receiving child care allowances; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: This information is not held centrally. Training and enterprise councils and local enterprise companies are required to deliver programmes that meet the needs of all their client groups. It is for the training and enterprise councils and local enterprise companies to determine which trainee groups, such as lone parents, they support with child care.

Departmental Staff

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish a table showing the number of (a) men and (b) women in his Department in each of grades (i) 1, (ii) 2, (iii) 3, (iv) 4, (v) 5, (vi) 6, (vii) 7, (viii) SEO, (ix) HEO, (x) administrative trainee, (xi) EO, (xii) CO and (xiii) CA.

Mr. Jackson: The information is set out in the table.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the total number of employees in his Department; and how many are (a) black and (b) disabled.

Mr. Jackson: The total number of employees on 1 April 1991 was 52,784. At the same date there were 2,564 who classified themselves as of ethnic minority origin and 1,688·5 full-time equivalents who were registered as disabled.

Trade Union Elections

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received from Mrs. Pamela Wilkins and the National Union of Rail, Maritime and Transport Workers about the result of an election to the executive committee of the former National Union of Seamen; how many representations he has received about electoral fraud in the trade unions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. and learned Friend, the Secretary of State for Employment has received no representations about that particular election. However, continuing public concern about electoral fraud in trade unions led to the proposals in the Green Paper "Industrial Relations in the 1990s", Cm. 1602, which would help ensure that the basic right of union members to free and fair elections is effectively protected. The Government announced on 28 January that they intend to bring forward legislation to put those proposals into effect.

Low-Energy Lighting

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will make it his policy progressively to introduce low-energy lighting in all the buildings operated by his Department.

Mr. Forth: As part of the energy efficiency campaign on teh Government estate, it is already the Department's policy to install energy-efficient lighting.

Earnings

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what were the earnings, expressed as percentages, of (a) young men under 18 years and (b) young women under 18 years, compared with those aged 18 years and over, in 1979 and at the latest convenient date.

Mr. Forth: Information on the average gross weekly earnings of men and women aged under 18 and aged 18 and over, in April 1979 and April 1991, is published in table 124 of part E of the new earnings survey reports for those years.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many full-time males, part-time males, full-time females and part-time females in employment in the Leeds metropolitan district council earn less than £3·40 per hour.

Mr. Forth: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave him on 25 November 1991, Official Report, at column 392.

Wages Councils

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his latest estimate of the effect the removal of wages council legal protection for young people has had on low pay and youth unemployment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: Since 1986 young people have no longer been subject to the minimum rates of pay decided by wages councils. The average earnings of young people have continued to increase in real terms and the greater flexibility resulting from the removal of wage restrictions will have improved their job prospects. However, we have no information which distinguishes between the effects of wages council reforms and other factors in the labour market on young people's pay.

Wages Inspectors

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many establishments since 1979 have been found to be underpaying their workers and how many prosecutions have taken place; how many wages inspectors are currently in post and how many establishments they cover; and what was the position in 1979.

Mr. Forth: The information requested is as follows:

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Lord President of the Council what is the current level of financial support provided via Short money to the Opposition parties.

Mr. MacGregor: Following the resolution of the House on 21 June 1988, payments are made at a scale of £2,550 for every seat won by each party at the preceding general election, plus £5·10 for every 200 votes cast for its candidates. To qualify for such assistance, a party is required either to have won at least two seats at the general election or, if only one seat has been won, to have received at least 150,000 votes.

Special Standing Committees

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Lord President of the Council what is his policy towards an extension of the use of Special Standing Committees to examine legislation prior to Second Reading.

Mr. MacGregor: It would be quite inappropriate for detailed consideration of a Bill to take place before the principle had been agreed at Second Reading.

Select Committees

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Lord President of the Council what is his policy towards the Departmental Selection Committees being allowed to play a consultative role in the regular legislative process.

Mr. MacGregor: In its report on the working of the Select Committee system—second report, Session 1989-90—the Procedure Committee did not favour a legislative function for Select Committees related to Government Departments. Nor do I.

Office Cost Allowance

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Lord President of the Council what is the present level of office cost allowance for Back-Bench Members.

Mr. MacGregor: The maximum office costs allowance payable to a Member of the House of Commons is £28,986 for the year beginning 1 April 1991, with an additional £2,899—10 per cent.—available for employer pension contributions of staff employed.

Members' Offices

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee (1) how many rooms are currently available as hon. Members' offices in the Palace of Westminster and other buildings in the parliamentary estate;

(2) when he expects there to be a sufficient number of offices available to enable each hon. Member to have an offices of his/her own.

Mr. Ray Powell: There are at present 294 rooms in the Palace available for Members. A further 236 are located elsewhere in the parliamentary estate. It is expected that, once the phase 2 building is commissioned, every Member who wants a room of his or her own will be able to have one. The timetable for the opening of that building is one of the issues addressed in the report of the Accommodation and Works Committee, due to be published on 27 February.

HOUSE OF COMMONS COMMISSION

Library Staff

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, representing the House of Commons Commission, what is (a) the total number of staff in the House of Commons Library, (b) the total number of staff in the research division of the Commons Library and (c) the number of research staff in the defence and foreign affairs section of the Library.

Mr. Beith: The current complement of staff in the Department of the Library, which includes the Vote Office, is 197·5; of that number 52 are employed in the research division and a further 12 in the international affairs and defence section. From 5 April, the total for the international affairs and defence section will be increased to 13.

Select Committees

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission, what is the financial level of support available to each of the departmental Select Committees for the recruitment of the services of specialist advisers.

Mr. Beith: A total sum of £257,000 is available in sub-head A.2 (Department of the Clerk of the House) of the vote for House of Commons: administration (class XIX A, vote 1) in the current financial year to meet the fees and other costs of specialist advisers appointed to the Select Committees of the House. The House of Commons Commission does not impose any financial limit on individual Select Committees for the services provided by specialist advisers.

Mr. Eggar: A large number of representations were received from further education colleges on the proposals set out in the White Paper "Education and Training for the 21st Century" (Cm 1536).

National Curriculum

12. Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what progress is being made on the implementation of the national curriculum.

Mr. Eggar: The final subjects in the national curriculum —art, music and physical education—will be introduced on time this September in line with the timetable we set in 1989 and have kept to ever since.

Research Funding

13. Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science on what basis future research funding will be assessed for those polytechnics that become universities.

Mr. Alan Howarth: All higher education institutions will be able to compete for funding for basic and strategic research on the basis of assessed quality. The Universities Funding Council has consulted all institutions on the criteria for its forthcoming research assessment exercise.

Student Unions

14. Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received about the closed shop in local student unions.

Mr. Alan Howarth: During the course of the consultations initiated by the Government on student unions, my right hon. and learned Friend has received a variety of representations for and against automatic membership of student unions.

Grant-maintained Schools

15. Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has for the extension of grant-maintained status to all schools.

Mr. Eggar: The current arrangements by which schools may apply for grant-maintained status following a ballot of parents are proving very successful. We have no plans to change them. In time I expect grant-maintained status to become the norm for secondary schools in particular.

17. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many maintained schools have so far (a) applied for and (b) been granted grant-maintained status; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: As at 18 February 1992, 288 schools had applied for grant-maintained status and 199 had been approved, with 55 awaiting decision.

Teacher Training

19. Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the future of teacher training.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I intend to make teacher training, primary and secondary, much more school based. I issued a consultation document on the reform of postgraduate training for secondary school teaching on 28 January. The consultation period will last until the end of March. I have also asked the Council for the Accreditation of Teacher Education to advise me on the implications for primary teacher training of the recently published discussion paper on curriculum organisation and classroom practice in primary schools.

20. Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proposals he has to deal with the backlog of outstanding repairs in schools.

21. Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proposals he has to deal with the backlog of outstanding repairs in schools.

Mr. Fallon: We are already providing huge capital resources. More than £700 million is available for maintained school buildings in 1992-93, an increase of nearly 15 per cent. on the year before, and 35 per cent. above 1991. In addition local education authorities are free to top up their education annual capital guidelines from the overall capital resources at their disposal. It is for them to set expenditure levels and priorities and to use their resources efficiently.

22. Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will provide specific funding for the repair and maintenance of schools in the city of Leicester.

Mr. Fallon: It is not open to the Secretary of State to provide specific funding for such work at county and controlled schools. It is for the local education authority to decide which projects to fund from the capital resources available to it, including education annual capital guidelines made available by my right hon. and learned Friend.

Grant aid for external repairs and for capital work at voluntary-aided schools is available on application in the normal way.

School Budgets

23. Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received from headteachers about the effect of the standard spending assessment on school budgets for the forthcoming year.

24. Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the pupil-teacher ratio in 1991; and what was the figure in 1979.

Mr. Fallon: The overall pupil-teacher ratios in maintained nursery, primary and secondary schools in England in January 1991 and January 1979 were 17.20 and 18.95 respectively.

Education Spending, North Yorkshire

25. Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much was spent per pupil in north Yorkshire in 1987 and in the current year.

Mr. Fallon: In 1986-87, school-based spending in north Yorkshire was on average some £1,055 per nursery, primary and secondary school pupil. In 1989-90, the latest year for which information on actual spending is available, the figure was some £1,390. That represents a real terms increase of 9 per cent.

Pupil Placements

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the total number of employees in his Department; and how many are (a) black and (b) disabled.

Mr. Atkins: On 1 April 1991 the Department employed a headcount total of 2,838 staff of whom 261 respondents to the ethnic monitoring survey were of ethnic minority origins.

The latest figures provided on registered disabled staff relate to 1 June 1991 at which time there were 70 registered disabled staff out of a total of 2,679 full-time equivalent staff. There are other staff in the Department with disabilities who have chosen not to register and are not included in the above figure.

Reading Standards

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many children under seven years of age have not reached a satisfactory standard of reading; and what is his estimate of the numbers who would benefit from a child-centred recovery scheme.

Mr. Eggar: Pupil's reading abilities are tested under the national curriculum at the end of key stage 1 when most pupils are aged seven. The 1991 national tests revealed that 28 per cent. of seven-year-olds had not yet reached level 2 in reading, the target set for typical seven-year-olds.

It is for individual schools to decide how to tackle pupils' reading needs. However, we are undertaking a national trial of the reading recovery programme to be conducted in some 200 inner-city schools in 21 local authorities, and focusing on children who, at the age of six, are experiencing difficulty in learning to read and write. About £10 million is planned to be supported with specific grant under the grants for education support and training programme over the three years 1992-93 to 1994-95 for this and other reading initiatives for inner-city schools.

Music

Dr. Hampson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what assessment he has made of the extent to which his draft orders for music in the national curriculum will meet his original intention of achieving a broad and balanced curriculum.

Mr. Eggar: The Government's plans for the music curriculum for children aged five to 14 will ensure that all pupils for the first time receive a rigorous and balanced musical education as an integral part of a broad national curriculum. Our plans for increasing the choice of study available for 14 to 16-year-olds will ensure that pupils have the opportunity to follow their own particular inclinations and strengths, while still being required to pursue a broader and more balanced curriculum than hitherto.

Institute Laue Langevin

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the future of British participation in the Institute Laue Langevin at Grenoble.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Further to my answer to the hon. Member for Wyre Forest (Mr. Coombs) on 28 November 1991, Official Report, column 590, about the review by the Science and Engineering Research Council of neutron science, formal notice was given on 16 December 1991 of the United Kingdom's intention to terminate the present Institut Laue Langevin (ILL) convention with effect from 1 January 1994, and of our wish to replace it with a new convention from that date. Discussions on this are now in progress with French and German partners in ILL.

NALGO

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he last met members of NALGO to discuss expenditure on education; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fallon: My right hon. and learned Friend has not had any such meeting.

Low-Energy Lighting

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will make it his policy progressively to introduce low-energy lighting in all the buildings operated by his Department.

Mr. Atkins: Practically all the Department's buildings are equipped with low-energy lighting. It is the Department's policy progressively to install energy efficient lighting in premises where such equipment is not already fitted.

Capital Expenditure, Newham

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will state the capital expenditure on education by Her Majesty's Government in the London borough of Newham since June 1979.

Mr. Eggar: The available data indicate that capital allocations for education within Newham LEA since 1981-82 amount to more than £43 million.

European Community and Sport

Mr. Robert Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement about the Government's position in response to the European Commission's communication on the European Community and sport.

Mr. Atkins: The Government's position is set out in an explanatory memorandum which I submitted to Parliament on 14 February.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Fair Employment

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table to show the number of vacancies filled in each of the education and library board headquarters, in each of the last available three years, the number of applications received by each board in each of those years, and the number of complaints made under the fair employment legislation in respect of those posts in each year and the number of such complaints which went to a tribunal; how many went to court; what amount of compensation was paid; and how many are still ongoing.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information requested is as follows:

Board	1989		1990		1991
	Number of vacancies filled	Number of applications received	Number of vacancies filled	Number of applications received	Number of vacancies filled	Number of applications received
Belfast	102	585	105	1,249	98	823
North-Eastern	64	463	81	762	68	458
South-Eastern	82	949	73	1,228	32	267
Southern	41	467	82	1,194	120	1,924
Western	93	1,065	77	650	96	683

In 1989 one complaint against the Southern board was taken to the Fair Employment Agency which upheld the board's decision. In 1990 two complaints were made to the North-Eastern board but went no further. In 1991 two complaints against the Southern board were taken to the Fair Employment Commission, one is now awaiting a tribunal hearing, the other, together with a third complaint, against the Western board, is still under consideration.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table to show for each of the last three years for which figures are available the number of vacancies filled by the Housing Executive, the number of applications received by the Executive for those posts in each year and the number of complaints made under the fair employment legislation in respect of those posts in each year and the number of such complaints which went to a tribunal; how many went to court; what sums were paid in compensation; and how many are still ongoing.

Mr. Needham: The information available is as follows:

	1990	1991
Number of vacancies filled	588	131
Number of applications received	7,000	4,500

I am advised by the chairman of the Housing Executive that there were no complaints in 1989 or 1991. In 1990 four complaints were taken to the Fair Employment Commission which is still considering them.

98. Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps have been taken by the rate collection agency to appoint equality officers to ensure that fair employment legislation and sex discrimination legislation is being adhered to in relation to all staff appointments.

Mr. Needham: The rate collection agency has no responsibility for the appointment of its staff. All permanent appointments to the agency are made by the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland which has a full-time equal opportunities officer in its employment.

The recruitment of casual staff by the agency is monitored centrally by the equal opportunities unit of the Department of Finance and Personnel.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what steps have been taken by the area education and library boards to appoint equality officers to ensure that fair employment and sex discrimination legislation is being adhered to in relation to all staff appointments;

(2) what steps have been taken to ensure that persons involved in interview panels in the area education and library boards are adequately briefed about employment legislation to ensure equality under the Fair Employment (NI) Act 1989 and the Sex Discrimination (NI) Order 1988.

Dr. Mawhinney: Following the publication of an equal opportunities policy statement in 1989, committing the boards to the principle of equality of opportunity, each board established an equal opportunties unit, in January 1990, to comply with its statutory obligations.

This policy statement is emphasised within the overall training programme for board members, officers of the boards, school governors and members of governing bodies of institutions of further education, including training for membership of selection panels for recruitment and promotion purposes. A guidance memorandum has been issued by the boards to all boards of governors, together with a distance learning package, providing advice on all matters relating to equality of opportunity for persons both employed and seeking employment.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps have been taken by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive to appoint equality officers to ensure that fair employment and sex discrimination legislation is being adhered to in relation to all staff appointments.

Mr. Needham: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, but I have been advised by its chairman that the executive has implemented a number of steps to ensure that the fair employment and sex discrimination legislation is being adhered to in relation to all staff appointments.

An equal opportunities unit was established in 1989 and its staff are trained in the legislation relating to fair employment and sex discrimination. The unit is responsible for monitoring the impact of personnel policies, including recruitment, throughout the organisation and has developed equal opportunities polices in respect of sex, religion and disability. The application of policies which have been approved by the board of the Executive and agreed with the staff trade union, NIPSA, is monitored by the unit.

The unit has also organised several seminars to ensure that staff are aware of the policies and that they are implemented effectively.

The Executive has also set up an equality working group, which is comprised of a wide spectrum of Executive staff from across the Province, and participates in the employers equality group which has representatives from some of the major employers in the Province.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps have been taken by each district council to appoint equality officers to ensure that fair employment and sex discrimination legislation is being adhered to in relation to all staff appointments.

Mr. Needham: District councils are employers in their own right and it is a matter, therefore, for each council to ensure that it complies with the statutory requirements of the fair employment and sex discrimination legislation.

I understand, however, that every council, in recognition of the importance of the requirements, has allocated responsibility for monitoring equality of opportunity to an officer at chief officer level.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps have been taken to ensure that persons involved in interview panels in the Northern Ireland Tourist Board are adequately briefed about employment legislation to ensure equality under the Fair Employment (Northern Ireland) Act 1989 and the Sex Discrimination (Northern Ireland) Order 1988.

Mr. Needham: Fair employment and sex discrimination legislation are emphasised in training programmes for all board staff likely to be involved in selection interviewing. In advance of selection interviews panel members receive written guidance on good practice and are fully briefed on their responsibilities.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps have been taken to ensure that persons involved in interview panels in the rate collection agency are adequately briefed about employment legislation to ensure equality under the Fair Employment (Northern Ireland) Act 1989 and the Sex Discrimination (Northern Ireland) Order 1988.

Mr. Needham: The Rate Collection Agency does not at present have responsibility for the convening of interview panels to fill posts within the agency. All full-time appointments to the agency are made by the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland and where recruitment of such staff is involved this is undertaken by recruitment branch of the Department of Finance and Personnel.

In so far as recruitment for casual employment is concerned this is undertaken by the agency's own staff by way of interview panels normally consisting of two persons. Only those staff who have received training in recruitment interviewing by the Department of the Environment's training branch are eligible to sit on such panels. This training includes briefing on employment legislation in Northern Ireland.

Promotion to higher grades is also presently the responsibility of the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland. All agency staff who meet the eligibility criteria for promotion are entitled to be considered and all promotion panels are set up by the Department of the Environment in accordance with established civil service procedures.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps have been taken to ensure that persons involved in interview panels in the Northern Ireland Housing Executive are adequately briefed about employment legislation to ensure equality under the Fair Employment (Northern Ireland) Act 1989 and the Sex Discrimination Order (Northern Ireland) 1988.

Mr. Needham: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, but I have been advised by its chairman that all staff involved in interviewing either internal or external candidates for posts in the executive must complete a three-day training course. The course contains specific elements relating to equal opportunities issues including fair employment and sex discrimination legislation. Participants are given an overview of the legislation, its purpose and the need for monitoring, together with illustration of types of direct and indirect discriminatory practices.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps have been taken to ensure that persons involved in interview panels in district councils are adequately briefed about employment legislation to ensure equality under the Fair Employment (NI) Act 1989 and the Sex Discrimination (NI) Order 1988.

Mr. Needham: Under section 40 of the Local Government Act (NI) 1972 the Local Government Staff Commission for Northern Ireland is responsible for establishing a code of procedure for securing fair and equal consideration of applications to district councils by persons seeking to be employed by them.

The staff commission has established an equality of opportunity working group to review the equality of opportunity policies and practices of district councils. It is anticipated that the staff commission will produce a code of practice on recruitment and selection in May this year for adoption by all councils. The code will require all those involved in interview panels to be properly trained on all aspects of fair employment and sex discrimination legislation. Training will be undertaken by the staff commission and the Public Service Training Council.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps have been taken by the Northern Ireland Tourist Board to appoint equality officers who will ensure that fair employment legislation and sex discrimination legislation is being adhered to in relation to all staff appointments.

Mr. Needham: The responsibilities of the board's personnel manager include those of equality officer.

Improvement and Repair Grants

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many applications for improvement grants have been (a) made, (b) approved and (c) refused in each year from 1 April 1988, and from 1 April to 31 December 1991, at (i) Lisburn and (ii) Newry offices;

(2) how many applications for repair grants have been (a) made, (b) approved and (c) refused in each year from 1 April 1988, and from 1 April to 31 December 1991 at (i) Lisburn and (ii) Newry offices.

Mr. Needham: These are matters for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive but the chairman has advised me that information about the number of cases refused is not recorded and that details of the number of applications received is not held in the form requested and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

The number of applications approved are as follows:

Year	Improvement Grants		Repair Grants
	Lisburn	Newry	Lisburn	Newry
1988-89	158	305	318	181
1989-90	127	195	330	205
1990-91	153	192	200	170
[1]1991-92	142	172	207	130

[1] To 31 December 1991.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many applications for improvement and repair grants have not been approved due to the current moratorium placed on all capital expenditure at (i) Lisburn and (ii) Newry offices.

Mr. Needham: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive but the chairman has informed me that approval of applications for improvement and repair grants has not been affected by the temporary pause in spending on new capital contracts and some maintenance works.

Construction Industry

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many jobs he estimates to have been lost in the construction industry as a result of the moratorium placed on capital expenditure in early December 1991.

Mr. Needham: It is not possible to assess accurately the impact on jobs in the construction industry of the temporary pause in spending on new capital contracts and some maintenance works. The overall employment effects are likely to be minimal as the total volume of public expenditure has not been reduced.

Housing Associations

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list new housing associations in Northern Ireland registered since 31 December 1987; and how many habitations are provided by each of them.

Mr. Needham: The Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland has registered only one housing association since 31 December 1987. The Oaklee housing association, which was registered on 4 November 1991, does not currently provide any units of habitation, but it will take over the properties currently owned by the James Butcher and Nih housing associations when the merger of these two associations is completed on 6 April 1992. The combined stock will consist of 1,473 self-contained dwellings and 254 bed spaces in shared accommodation.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if he will list details of grants and loans made to each unregistered housing association in Northern Ireland by the Housing Executive from 1 April 1988 to 31 March 1991, and from 1 April 1991 to 31 December 1991;

(2) if he will list details of grants and loans made to each housing association in Northern Ireland by the Housing Executive from 1 April 1988 to 31 March 1991, and from 1 April 1991 to 31 December 1991.

Mr. Needham: The chairman of the Housing Executive has advised me that grants to unregistered housing associations in Northern Ireland have been paid as follows:

	1988-89 £	1989-90 £	1990-91 £	[1]1991 £
Glenall Housing Co-operative	—	—	3,750	7,500
Victoria Estates	405	405	405	405

[1] 1 April 1991 to 31 December 1991.

The Housing Executive has not made any loans to unregistered housing associations in the period since 1 April 1988.

No grants or loans have been made to registered housing associations in these periods. Government funding of registered housing associations is channelled through the Department of Environment for Northern Ireland; such details as are available are set out in the answer which I gave the hon. Member for North Down (Mr. Kilfedder) on 22 October 1991—Official Report, columns 554-57.

Privatisations

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what change there will be to the block vote to Northern Ireland as a result of the privatisation of Harland and Wolff and Shorts.

Dr. Mawhinney: These privatisations do not affect the overall level of resources allocated to the Northern Ireland block, which is adjusted mainly through the operation of the comparability arrangements. Some payments are still to be made to the companies under the privatisation agreements but these will taper off over time.

"The Way Ahead"

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will take steps to implement the proposals contained in the Housing Executive document about rural unfitness entitled, "The Way Ahead".

Mr. Needham: Implementation of the proposals contained in "The Way Ahead" is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, but I have been advised by the chairman that a number have already been put into practice. This has in some instances required detailed consultation with the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland who will continue to support the executive's contribution to the rural initiative programme by responding as quickly as possible to any remaining policy issues.

Anglo-Irish Conference

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when is the next meeting of the Anglo-Irish ministerial conference.

Dr. Mawhinney: The next meeting of the conference is likely to take place shortly.

EC Programmes

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how the £18 million approved by the European Commission in respect of STRIDE, Prisma and Telematique programmes will be allocated in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: The amounts of EC aid allocated to the Northern Ireland programmes are as follows:

£10 million—STRIDE
£4 million—Prisma
£4 million—Telematique

All three programmes will be managed by the Department of Economic Development. Press announcements seeking applications for assistance under the STRIDE measure have already appeared and similar calls for Prisma and Telematique projects will be made shortly.

Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1991

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many persons have been charged with (a) an offence under section 25(2)(b) section 25(3)(a) or (c) section 25(3)(b) of the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1991.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 19 February 1992]: No persons have been charged with an offence under any of these provisions since the coming into force of the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1991 on 27 August last year.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Frankfurt Exhibition

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will give details of support offered by his Department in respect of the Frankfurt international trade exhibition 1992 to the pottery industry.

Mr. Sainsbury: My Department did not provide financial assistance to the pottery industry for this event.

British Technology Group

Dr. Bray: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has discussed with the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals or the heads of the research councils the sale of the British Technology Group.

Mr. Leigh: The DTI consulted with the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals of the United Kingdom universities about the invitations and advertisements issued in connection with the sale of British Technology Group plc, as required by section 7 of the British Technology Group Act 1991.

Bureaux de Change

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to control exchange rate indications by bureaux de change.

Mr. Lilley: For too long the incomplete and obscure way some signs setting out exchange rate indications are displayed has led to confusion. Regulations I have laid before the House today will enable consumers to compare rates more easily and shop around for the best deal.

The Price Indications (Bureaux de Change) Regulations 1992 mean that exchange rate indications must: give full details of the terms on which transactions will be conducted. Where an operator buys and sells a currency at different rates, or buys and sells travellers cheques at different rates from notes, all rates will have to be given; give full information on commission rates and any other fees, giving them the same degree of prominence as the exchange rates themselves; be easily visible to customers as they approach the premises.

In addition, customers must be given: all information relevant to a particular transaction when they enquire about an exchange rate; receipts setting out details of the transaction, except in the case of some machines; a clear explanation of the basis on which the rate will be determined when currency is ordered for supply at a later date.

Bureaux de change must comply with these regulations which come into force on 18 May 1992.

However, requirements to display the information on fees and commission rates with the same degree of prominence as the exchange rates themselves will take effect on 18 May 1993. This is to allow operators time to modify or replace display equipment.

Financial Services

Mr. Michael Spicer: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what progress has been made by EC member states towards providing for a single market in financial services with respect in particular to cross border branch networks and to cross border investment by one financial institution in another.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 19 February 1992]: The United Kingdom financial services sector already conducts a great deal of cross-border business either through subsidiaries or under the freedoms enshrined in the treaty of Rome. The single market programme was designed to facilitate this further by allowing insurance companies, banks, building societies and investment firms the ability to conduct business throughout the EC on the basis of home state authorisation.

Political agreement has been reached on a directive creating more freedom in non-life insurance and should be adopted by the Council of Ministers before the summer. Adoption of its sister directive on life assurance is expected by the end of this year.

The adopted second banking co-ordination directive will, from 1 January 1993, enable a credit institution—a bank or a building society in the United Kingdom—to branch and offer services into other member states on the basis of certain agreed minimum standards. The supervisory arrangements to deal with cross-border investment by credit institutions in groups which include a bank will also be covered by the second banking consolidated supervision directive which is expected to be adopted shortly.

Negotiations on the investment services directive, which is intended to allow investment firms to establish branches and provide services throughout the EC subject to minimum standards, are stalled over draft provisions which would impose rules and restrictions on where and how financial transactions are undertaken. The United Kingdom supports the view of a number of member states that these measures would not open the EC investment services market and the directive would, in its current form, hinder the single market in financial services.

Coalfield Areas (Support)

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his statement of 17 February, Official Report, column 22, what contact he had with Commissioner Millan concerning the level and scope of the new business support measures in coalfield areas; what amount of financial resources will be concerned; and from what estimate they will be authorised.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 21 February 1992]: The United Kingdom RECHAR programmes sent to the European Commission in July 1990 all proposed that business support measures should be implemented as part of these programmes.

Implementation was delayed by the delay to the Commission's approval of the programmes in general. We have informed the Commission in outline about the proposed business support measures, which form one part of the programmes to be approved by Commissioner Millan.

I told the House on 17 February, Official Report, column 22 that, to contribute to the RECHAR programmes, the Government will shortly be announcing methods of new business support measures of our own to assist small firms in coalfield areas.

Defence Sales

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much, in each of the last five years, of the Export Credits Guarantee Department budget was available to support overseas defence sales.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 21 February 1992]: No amounts are set aside specifically for defence sales. Ministers announced in June 1988 a facility for providing £1 billion of export credit support for major defence exports, Official Report, 28 June 1988, columns 164-65. While the limit has been largely utilised, this represents only the level of defence sales supported within the terms of the facility.

EC Co-operative Statute

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the organisations that the United Kingdom Government are consulting on the draft European co-operative statute, adopted by the European Commission in December 1991.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 24 February 1992]: The Government have not yet received a formal translation of the Commission's draft European co-operative statute. Consultation with interested bodies in the United Kingdom will take place as appropriate when we receive a formal proposal.

National Engineering Laboratory

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will give details of each external consultancy study undertaken in each of the last five years into the operation of the national engineering laboratory.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 24 February 1992]: Since the study by Touche Ross Management Consultants, completed in April 1989, there has been no external consultancy study covering the overall operation of NEL.

Publicity

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list all the television advertising campaigns and all other publicity campaigns costing over £100,000 to be carried out by his Department in February, March, April, May or June of the current year.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 24 February 1992]: I refer to the list of the departmental programmes given to the hon. Member on 1 July 1991, Official Report, column 20. Supporting publicity for those programmes continues, but there are no current plans for television advertising in the period referred to.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Social Fund

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make it a requirement that the statement in "Social Fund Manual" paragraph 5023 be included in all area social fund officers' guidance.

Mr. Scott: We are currently considering the need for extending and amending the existing advice to area social fund officers on the production of their guidance.

Pensioners

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the latest estimates of how many pensioners are (a) male, (b) female, (c) single and (d) married, in Great Britain.

Miss Widdecombe: In mid-1990 the estimated number, in thousands, of men and women at state pension age and over in Great Britain was:

	Men	Women
Married:	2,536	2,995
Not Married:	987	3,741

Source: OPCS mid-year estimates.

Low-Energy Lighting

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he will make it his policy progressively to introduce low-energy lighting in all the buildings operated by his Department.

Mr. Jack: The Department is committed to promoting energy efficiency and this policy was confirmed in the reply given to the hon. Member for Stalybridge and Hyde (Mr. Pendry) on 28 January 1991 at column 431-32 and at paragraph 122 of the 1992 departmental report (Cm. 1914), a copy of which is available in the Library.

National Insurance Contributions

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people in Scotland are paying national insurance contributions as self-employed.

Mr. Jack: The information requested is not available separately for Scotland.

Pensions

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) pursuant to his answer of 3 February, Official Report, column 96, what would be the net cost to the Exchequer of raising the basic state pension in 1992-93 to £59·15 per week for single pensioners and £95·70 per week for married couples on the same basis as given in that answer, after taking into account extra income tax receipts and off-setting savings on expenditure on income-related benefits;

(2) what would be the net cost to the Exchequer, after taking into account higher tax receipts and savings on expenditure on income-related benefits, of increasing the basic state pension in 1992-93 to £59·15 per week for single people and to £94·70 per week for married couples, on the basis that the increased pensions were paid to all regardless of contributory record.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 7 February 1992]: Information on the savings on income-related benefits is not yet available for 1992-93 in the form requested. However, using existing basic pension rates increased by £5 per week for a single person, giving £57 and £8 per week a married couple, giving £91·25, costings comparable with 1992-93 can be made.

For 1991-92 the gross cost would be £3·9 billion with offsetting savings of £1·0 billion on income-related benefits. Income tax receipts would rise by £0·2 billion. The net cost to the Exchequer would be £2·7 billion. The combined cost of this increase in national insurance contributions to a man on full-time average earnings and his employer would be £5·20 per week in 1991-92.

Pension Rights

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will introduce an early warning system to inform contributors that they need to make back payments on their national insurance contributions to maximise their pension rights; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will produce advice for the public on arrangements for making back-payments of national insurance contributions to help people to maximise their pension rights; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 24 February 1992]: The Department already writes automatically to relevant groups of contributors following the end of any year in which their contribution record is insufficient to count towards basic retirement pension. In addition, the Department also provides a retirement pension forecast to contributors: they can request a forecast by completing an application form (BR 19) obtainable at local social security offices. The forecast gives details of the pension entitlement based on the national insurance record held. It states the number of qualifying years required in the future to obtain the maximum pension which can be achieved, and offers advice on the payment of additional contributions, if required.

The Contributions Agency has a high level of commitment to provide information and assistance to all its customers. This is shown in the charters recently issued by the agency and I will send the hon. Member copies of these documents.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give for the Scottish Ambulance Service, Greater Glasgow area, in April 1991 and December 1991 the number of (a) urgent calls and (b) emergency calls.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information about the Greater Glasgow area is:

	April 1991	December 1991
Number of urgent calls	2,762	2,779
Number of emergency calls	3,415	4,175

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the number of cases currently being considered by the procurator fiscal for fatal accident investigation in which delay in ambulance response from the Scottish Ambulance Service, Greater Glasgow area, is considered a possible factor.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I am advised by my noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate that no such cases are currently being considered.

Lead Poisoning

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what studies his Department are conducting into the dangers of lead poisoning, especially for children; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: In January 1992 the chief scientist office of the Scottish Office Home and Health Department approved funding amounting to £27,000 for a one-year study by Dr. Mary Fulton of the University of Edinburgh to determine the impact of treating water to reduce its lead content on the blood lead levels of those children who participated in her earlier research into the influence of blood lead on the ability and attainment of children in Edinburgh.

The health implications of lead are fully recognised by the Government and measures have been taken to reduce lead exposure through petrol, water, industrial emissions and a range of other sources.

Pittenweem Harbour

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he intends to give borrowing consent to Fife regional council for the construction of a breakwater at Pittenweem harbour.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. Friend expects to announce his decisions on capital expenditure consents for local authorities very shortly.

Texts (Efficiency Scrutiny)

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about the efficiency scrutiny of text creation in the Scottish Office.

Mr. Lang: The efficiency scrutiny was recently completed and I have today placed in the House Library a copy of the scrutiny team's report. It makes a number of recommendations. My Department will now produce an action plan outlining the Scottish Office response to the report.

Candidiasis and Myalgic Encephalomyelitis

Mr. Eadie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the provision made by each health board in the treatment of candidiasis and myalgic encephalomyelitis; and what is the approximate spend of each health board annually on such treatment.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 24 February 1992]: Treatment of these conditions is a matter for general practitioners in the first instance. Costs for the treatment of these conditions cannot be identified separately.

Publicity

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list all the television advertising campaigns and all other publicity campaigns costing over £100,000 to be carried out by his Department in February, March, April, May or June of the current year.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 24 February 1992]: A television and press publicity campaign on solvent misuse and drug abuse is currently running in Scotland and will continue into March. The cost is £115,000. To date, the only campaign planned for the next financial year is one to promote car crime prevention. It will run on television in April and May at a cost of £110,000.

TRANSPORT

Shipping (North Sea)

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to restrict North sea supply vessels to those which sail under the British flag.

Mr. McLoughlin: No. It is our policy to seek the removal of such restrictions elsewhere. Liberalisation of cabotage trade, including offshore supply services, is currently one of our main objectives in the European Community. We believe this to be in the best interests of the British shipping industry as well as of those who use its services.

Blackwall Tunnel

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if, as part of the improvements for traffic control and avoidance of delays and congestion in and around the Blackwall tunnel, he will consider the merits of reverting to the practice of having a heavy duty breakdown vehicle permanently stationed at the north exit of that tunnel.

Mr. Chope: I shall consider the hon. Member's suggestion.

Air Traffic Noise

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will consider using the noise line statistics when judging the impact of air traffic on local communities.

Mr. McLoughlin: My noble Friend wrote to the hon. Member on this subject on 18 February.

Departmental Staff

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish a table showing the number of (a) men and (b) women in his Department in each of the grades (i) 1, (ii) 2, (iii) 3, (iv) 4, (v) 5, (vi) 6, (vii) 7, (viii) SEO, (ix) HEO, (x) administrative trainee, (xi) EO, (xii) CO and (xiii) CA.

Mr. McLoughlin: The table shows staff in the Department of Transport and its agencies by grade equivalent and gender. The figures reflect staff in post at 1 April 1991 of 15,984.

DTp staff by grade equivalent at 1 April 1991

Total	8,681	7,303	15,984

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the total number of employees in his Department; and how many are (a) black and (b) disabled.

Mr. McLoughlin: The total number of non-industrial staff in post in the Department of Transport, and its agencies, on 1 April 1991 was 15,484. A survey of the ethnic origin of non-industrial staff showed that of the respondents—representing 81 per cent. of the Department—619 were from ethnic minority groups.

MOT Tests

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many MOT tests were conducted in the area of Hawick, Roxburghshire in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Chope: There were 5,595 MOT tests carried out in the Hawick area between January and December 1991.

British Rail Privatisation

Mr. Snape: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) whether it is his intention that the provisions of the citizens charter applicable to British Rail will also apply to private sector rail operators after privatisation of the railway;

(2) how many civil servants he estimates will be required to be employed in regulation of safety, access, fares, franchising and service standards monitoring of the railway system after privatisation; and whether their costs will be met by the Exchequer or the railway customer;

(3) to which authority he intends to give responsibiliy for the safety training of railway staff and for testing in professional competence following the privatisation of British Rail;

(4) what obligations he intends to place on private sector operators taking over parts of British Rail to contribute to the work of the Railway Heritage Trust and to continue and expand the community involvement currently undertaken by British Rail;

(5) how he intends introduction of automatic train protection will be financed following the privatisation of British Rail;

(6) to whom he intends to give responsibility for the maintenance of the bridges, viaducts and other structures on closed branch lines following the privatisation of British Rail;

(7) which company or authority he intends to nominate to take over the 50 per cent. share of channel tunnel capacity contracted jointly to British Rail and French Railways following privatisation of British Rail;

(8) how he intends essential safety expenditure will be financed following the privatisation of British Rail;

(9) what arrangements he intends to make for railway research and development following the privatisation of British Rail;

(10) which authority he intends will represent Britain's railways on the International Union of Railways and the Community of European Railways following the privatisation of British Rail;

(11) how he intends to ensure the co-ordination of the planning and publication of timetables and the provision of train service information to customers throughout Great Britain following the privatisation of British Rail.

Mr. Freeman: We shall make known our proposals in due course.

Passenger Transport, South-East

Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish the total number of passengers (expressed as millions of passenger miles) carried by (a) London Underground, (b) London Buses, including tendered routes and (c) Network SouthEast in each year since 1980.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is given in the table.

Passenger miles (millions)

	London Underground	London bus services[1]	Network SouthEast
1980	2,640	2,579	8,100

Speed Limiters

Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how he intends to implement the provisions of the recently agreed EC directive requiring the fitment of speed limiters to heavy goods vehicles and passenger-carrying vehicles.

Mr. Chope: The United Kingdom has been ahead of the EC in recognising the road safety and environmental benefits associated with speed limiters. It has been a requirement to fit speed limiters on new coaches since April 1989; and new goods vehicles over 7·5 tonnes maximum weight will have to have limiters fitted from 1 August 1992. In addition, domestic regulations already require existing coaches registered since April 1974 to have speed limiters fitted.

We consulted last year on a proposal to require speed limiters to be fitted to certain types of existing heavy goods vehicles over 16 tonnes, and regulations to implement that initiative will be made shortly. We shall also be introducing regulations requiring that limiters must be secured against tampering only by officially approved centres.

Domestic regulations will need to be amended in due course to accommodate the additional requirements in the EC directive which will effectively limit the maximum speed of the coaches concerned to 65 mph, and the maximum speed of the heavy goods vehicles concerned to 56 mph. The regulations on existing heavy vehicles and coaches will also have to be extended to accommodate the slightly wider requirements of the EC directive. These amendments, which will ensure that domestic legislation satisfies all the EC requirements, will not need to be implemented until 1994 at the earliest.

M6

Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the current position on the proposed widening of the M6 and the competition for a private sector route in the Birmingham to Manchester corridor.

Mr. Rifkind: I have today announced plans for widening the M6 between junctions 11 and 20 to dual four-lane carriageway at an estimated cost of £450 million. A copy of the press notice setting out the details of what is proposed has been placed in the Library. I have also announced the decision that, for a variety of reasons, ranging from environmental to operational, none of the proposals received in response to the competition for a new privately-funded route in the Birmingham-Manchester corridor are to be taken forward. However, we shall keep under review the scope for involving the private sector further in road provision throughout the network.

In widening the M6, environmental assessment will be carried out and landscaping, planting and noise protection measures will be used extensively. We shall continue to consult local authorities and other interested organisations as we develop designs for widening. We will mount exhibitions to show our designs to the public and enable them to comment, prior to embarking on the normal statutory procedures required for this kind of road improvement.

Birmingham Western Orbital Route

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he plans to announce the next stage of the competition to build a privately funded Birmingham western orbital route.

Mr. Rifkind: I am today inviting pre-qualifying bids for this scheme from the private sector. A notice is being published in the Official Journal of the European Communities.

The aim of this pre-qualifying stage is to provide a basis for selecting a limited number of tenderers to avoid wasted tendering effort by the industry. The short-listed candidates will then be invited to tender to design, build, finance and operate the new road as a tolled road under a concession agreement with the Department.

Authorisation for the road scheme will be sought by procedures introduced by the New Roads and Street Works Act 1991. The road will be required to meet the same environmental and safety standards as any public sector scheme and there will be the same opportunity for a public inquiry.

The aim is for the scheme to be completed in the late 1990s, the same target as for the previous public scheme.

Low-Energy Lighting

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will make it his policy progressively to introduce low-energy lighting in all the buildings operated by his Department.

Mr. McLoughlin: Guidance on the use of low-energy lighting has been issued throughout this Department and has already been applied in a number of its buildings. Such systems will be progressively introduced where it is cost effective to do so.

Motorway Lighting

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what studies he has made of the impact of lighting on motorways on the incidence of driver/passenger fatalities and accidents; and with what results.

Mr. Chope: The results of a study undertaken by the Transport and Road Research Laboratory were published in 1987. The study concluded that there does not appear to be any evidence to support an increase in the Department's current assumption of a 30 per cent. reduction in night-time accidents, but the range of uncertainty remains high.

British International Helicopters

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about the procedures that were followed when British Airways was privatised with regard to the arrangements entered into over British International Helicopters; and what steps were taken to preserve the interests of the Exchequer and the staff of British International Helicopters.

Mr. McLoughlin: British International Helicopters, formerly British Airways Helicopters Ltd. (BAHL), a subsidiary of British Airways, was sold in September 1986, prior to the privatisation of British Airways. The decision to sell BAHL and the details of the negotiations were commercial matters for the British Airways Board.

Aberdeen Airways

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent application has been received for the operation of Aberdeen Airways; and what factors are taken into account in considering such applications.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Civil Aviation Authority has referred the case of Aberdeen Airways to the Secretary of State for Transport under section 66(3) of the Civil Aviation Act 1982 for a decision as to whether the airline's air transport licences should be revoked. All such cases are considered on their merits.

Written Answers to Questions

Wednesday 26 February 1992

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Legal Aid

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Attorney-General what proposals he has to secure the continuing availability of criminal legal aid in the magistrates courts of rural areas in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The Lord Chancellor is committed to ensuring that criminal legal aid services in the magistrates courts continue to be widely available. In 1990-91 the Legal Aid Board paid 440,000 bills in respect of criminal legal aid in the magistrates courts. In addition to this, just under 230,000 defendants were assisted under the magistrates courts duty solicitor scheme. This commitment extends to all areas of the country and there are no separate provisions for rural areas.

TRANSPORT

British Rail (Investment)

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list those investment projects for which British Rail is awaiting his approval; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: On 6 February the British Rail chairman sought authority for investment in 550 fully enclosed car carrying wagons for the import and export of finished cars via the channel tunnel.

A414, Danbury

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 16 January, Official Report, column 610-11, what is the latest progress on approving speed limits on the A414 through the village of Danbury; and when approval by his Department is expected to be given.

Mr. Chope: We are still waiting to hear from Essex county council concerning various legal issues. I shall write to my hon. Friend as soon as I am able to report progress.

ENVIRONMENT

River Wear (Pollution)

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the pollution incidents on the River Wear over the last 10 years; and how many prosecutions were made as a result.

Mr. Baldry: I understand that information on details of reported pollution incidents, or on numbers of prosecutions, is not held centrally by the National Rivers Authority in respect of individual rivers.

Global Environmental Facility

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the outcome of the meeting in Geneva on 14 February to review progress made in implementing the global environmental facility; and what commitment has been made by the United Kingdom in terms of (a) financial resources and (b) expertise to the GEF.

Mr. Baldry: The focus of the global environment facility—GEF—participants meeting was to discuss the evolution of the GEF and its relationship with the proposed international conventions on climate change and on biodiversity. The meeting was constructive. The GEF chairman has been given a mandate to approach convention negotiations to explain what links could be developed between the GEF and the conventions and to report to the next GEF meeting in April.

The United Kingdom has committed £40·3 million to the current three-year pilot phase of the GEF for global environmental activities including related expertise.

House Purchase Discount Schemes

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to ensure that applicants for houses under transferable discount schemes are limited to purchasing private sector property within the areas in which such schemes are operational.

Mr. Yeo: No. Cash incentive schemes are aimed at releasing housing in areas of acute housing pressure. Requiring grant recipients to purchase homes within such areas would add to the housing problems of those areas.

City Challenge

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will indicate the cost of hiring the Queen Elizabeth conference centre for the city challenge press conference held on 18 February.

Mr. Portillo: The cost of hiring the Mountbatten suite in the Queen Elizabeth II conference centre for the press launch of round two of city challenge on 18 February was £3,965·00, inclusive of VAT.

Federation of Associations of Manchester Estates

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations the Minister for Housing and Planning has received from the Federation of Associations of Manchester Estates; what reply is being sent; what action is being taken; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State wrote to the right hon. Member on 27 January about Manchester city council's housing investment programme allocation, which is also the subject of a letter dated 6 February received from the Federation of Associations of Manchester Estates. The Department's regional controller in the north-west replied to FAME on 25 February in similar terms.

North Yorkshire County Council

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the standard spending assessment in 1991-92 for North Yorkshire county council for social services; and what is the figure in 1992-93.

Mr. Key: The standard spending assessment for personal social services for North Yorkshire county council in 1991-92 is £49·89 million and for 1991-92 will be £52·837 million.

Marine Consultation Areas

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to issue a consultation paper on marine consultation areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: I am today issuing a joint consultation paper with the Welsh Office on a new scheme to extend the designation of sites of marine conservation interest in England and Wales beyond the existing statutory marine nature reserves. This new designation is "marine consultation area" and I am publishing a first list of 16 proposed sites together with draft Government guidelines, addressed to regulatory agencies, on the procedures to be adopted in relation to them. Comments are being invited from these regulatory agencies and from others with interests in the localities concerned, the conservation of marine fauna and flora, and the operations likely to be affected. These are to be with the Departments concerned by Wednesday 22 April 1992.

The scheme acknowledges the important role that statutory marine nature reserves have played, and will continue to play, in promoting marine nature conservation, while recognising that there is a legitimate conservation interest that extends beyond statutory reserves. The sea itself cannot be fenced off and effective protection of areas marine conservation interest requires voluntary co-operation from a wide range of sea users.

The scheme proposed builds on one already in place in Scotland but goes further by way of a Government circular which gives clear guidelines to promote consultation between all the bodies concerned. A draft of this circular forms the basis of the consultation document.

All bodies taking decisions that might affect the conservation interest of the listed sites are asked to consult English Nature, or the Countryside Council for Wales as appropriate, at the earliest feasible stage. Any advice offered by the conservation agencies as a result of this consultation is to be given due weight by decision-makers and the conservation agencies are to be told of decisions taken in the light of their advice.

The scheme is intended to run on an entirely voluntary basis with the Joint Nature Conservation Committee monitoring results in order to determine its effectiveness. Annual reports, which will be made available to the public on request, will be submitted to the Government Departments concerned.

The 16 sites have been selected on the basis of advice from English Nature and the Countryside Council for Wales and include existing and proposed statutory marine nature reserves. A full list indicating area and position is set out as an annex to the circular. Copies of the consultation paper have today been placed in the Library.

In addition, detailed descriptions of 16 sites, together with maps, are to be published separately in a free-standing document entitled "Marine Consultation Areas—A Description". Copies of the latest draft are available from my Department.

The issue of the consultation paper fulfils the commitment in the White Paper anniversary report "This Common Inheritance—The First Year Report", Cm 1655 —paragraph 5.28, that the Government would publish, on a consultative basis, by early 1992, a first list of proposed marine consultation areas in England and Wales, and draft Government guidelines addressed to regulatory agencies.

Housing Action Trusts

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the timetable and implementation date of the housing action trusts in Liverpool.

Sir George Young: Liverpool city council and tenants of its 71 high-rise blocks have recently pressed us to reach an early decision on whether to proceed to ballot tenants on the proposal for a housing action trust.

Following careful consideration of the feasibility study prepared by the council, my right hon. Friend has decided that a ballot should be undertaken as soon as practicable and convenient for tenants. I would be content for this to begin on 25 March.

Liverpool city council's 71 tower blocks currently suffer a range of severe physical, security and managerial problems. Nevertheless, with appropriate investment and management, I believe they can provide an important resource for meeting housing needs and for the foreseeable future. I am fully satisfied that the housing action trust proposal represents the best means of protecting this resource, and improving the housing, environmental and social conditions of tenants.

Emissions

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangements are in hand to take into consideration the combined, cumulative effects of emissions from projects in the south-east Thames corridor including the Deptford incinerator, the Bexley incinerator and the Greenwich power station when approval for each specific project is being sought separately.

Sir George Young [holding answer 24 February 1992]: All current applications for power stations and incinerators in the east Thamesside London boroughs are supported by environmental assessment statements. We are satisfied that existing arrangements for considering such applications can provide for appropriate account to be taken of the environmental effects of other developments in the vicinity of the one that is under consideration.

Mobile Homes

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to complete the current review of legislation affecting mobile home owners.

Mr. Yeo [holding answer 25 February 1992]: I shall be announcing proposals in the very near future.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list by region the location of computer-assisted tomography scanners and magnetic resonance machines that were funded by charitable appeals.

Health Service Pay

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people in the national health service, and at which grades, he expects to earn more than £20,280 per annum following the recent pay review body report.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave him on 5 February at column 207. Following the recent pay review body awards, it is now estimated that on 1 April 1992 at least 83,000 people working in the NHS in England, and in the same categories listed in the earlier reply, will have basic earnings greater than £20,280 per annum. An additional and substantial number in most of those categories will have gross earnings in excess of £20,280, because they receive additional payments such as overtime and allowances. The review body award for senior nurses and midwives, and pay settlements due on 1 April will further increase the numbers earning more than £20,280.

Prescriptions

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the cost of prescription charges for each year since 1979 in cash terms, real terms and as an index with 1979 as the base.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The requested information is in the table. Only one in six prescription items dispensed in the NHS now attracts a charge, compared with one in three in 1979. Last year over 100 million more exempt items were dispensed than in 1979.

Prescription charge £	Date of increase	Cost at 1979-80 prices £	Index (1979-80 prices)

GP Lists

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will review the present procedures whereby medical doctors can remove patients from their panel list without being required to give any reason; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Since the foundation of the NHS, a GP has had a right (subject to certain safeguards as regards necessary treatment) to remove a patient from his or her list without giving a reason. With effect from April 1990 patients have had the same right to withdraw from a doctor's list without giving a reason. The Family Health Service Authority will help any patient who has problems in finding another doctor, and, if necessary, will allocate the patient to a doctor's list.

Insulin

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 27 November, Official Report, column 544, to the hon. Member for Ashford, (Mr. Speed), when he hopes to provide needles for insulin-injecting pens on prescription for diabetics; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I cannot add to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Ashford on 27 November 1991 at column 544.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many representations he has received (a) in favour of and (b) against issuing needles for insulin-injecting pens on prescription to diabetics during the current session; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have received a number of representations in favour of issuing needles for insulin-injecting pens on prescription during the current session. We aim to make both pens and needles available on prescription as soon as resources allow.

Legionnaire's Disease

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the number of cases of Legionnaire's disease at each provider unit and trust since April 1991.

Mr. Dorrell: In 1991 three cases of Legionnaire's disease were reported in residents of England and Wales in patients who were believed to have acquired their infection in hospital. The three cases were reported from the Freeman group of hospitals NHS trust site at Freeman Road hospital, Newcastle, and the illness in the cases began in June, July and October respectively. There were 10 other cases reported in England and Wales which may have been contracted in hospital, but there was insufficient evidence to determine whether the source was in hospital or in the community.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the communicable disease surveillance centre is preparing a report on the recent outbreak of Legionnaire's disease at the Freeman hospital trust, Newcastle.

Mr. Dorrell: The public health laboratory service (PHLS) communicable disease surveillance centre was not involved in the investigation of this incident and will therefore not be preparing a report.

Pharmacy

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals he has for the introduction of a statutory requirement for pharmacists to inform customers when a medication is cheaper by normal retail sale than by prescription; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Only a small number of items prescribed by GPs can be bought without a prescription. Where these are available at a price less than the prescription charge, the pharmacist is, of course, free to point this out. There are no plans to make this a statutory requirement.

General Practitioner Charges

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals he has for the introduction of charges for visits to and by general practitioners; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There are no such plans.

Prescription Charges

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of prescriptions given to adults of less than pensionable age result in the payment of the prescription charge; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: An estimated 40 per cent. of prescription items dispensed to adults below the state retirement pension age attract a charge. Extensive exemption and charge remission arrangements, coupled with the prescription prepayment certificate scheme, protect those people who may otherwise have difficulty in paying prescription charges. In 1990-91 a charge was paid on only one item in six dispensed in the NHS and 100 million more items were dispensed free than in 1979, when one item in three attracted a charge.

Non-alcoholic Drinks

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions he has had on the promotion of non-alcoholic drinks.

Mr. Dorrell: We have had a number of informal meetings with the Portman Group and with some of its sponsor companies about how the sensible use of alcohol might be encouraged, in the course of which the promotion of non-alcoholic drinks has been discussed. At recent conferences "Women and Alcohol" in December 1991 and the "Education on Alcohol" conference this month, not only were non-alcoholic drinks advertised but they were the only drinks available.

Residential Care

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what representations he has received on the closure of residential care homes run by North Yorkshire county council in (a) Whitby and (b) Harrogate;

(2) what representations he has received concerning residential places for the elderly in the North Yorkshire county council area.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No such representations have been received. It is for each local authority to determine the best way in which to meet the need for social services in their area, including residential care.

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many places in residential care establishments in North Yorkshire were available in each of the last five years (a) under the management of North Yorkshire county council, (b) in the voluntary sector, (c) under the management of housing associations and (d) with other owners.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information in respect of elderly people is given in the table.

Overall residential care provision for elderly people in North Yorkshire increased from 5,500 in 1987 to 5,884 in 1991.

Table 1

Community Care Reforms

Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the Government are doing to help local authorities make the investment in information technology necessary to support its community care reforms.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We are committed to turning our community care policy into practice. We are making £10·175 million available through supplementary credit approval for capital spending in 1992-93 on information technology to support the implementation of "Caring For People". This allocation is more than double that for 1991-92. Local authorities will be free to use their allocation on systems to support any of the various aspects of "Caring For People". These may include systems to support care management and assessment, systems to enable complaints and inspection procedures, project planning and management systems and software to link existing databases with new financial management systems.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Departmental Staff

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the total number of employees in his Department; and how many are (a) black, and (b) disabled.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The total number of staff in post in the Foreign and Commonwealth Office including the Overseas Development Administration at 1 April 1991 was 8,277. In voluntary surveys 181 had declared themselves to be of ethnic minority origin. At 1 June 1991 the FCO employed 49 registered disabled staff.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish a table showing the number of (a) men and (b) women in his Department in each of grades (i) 1, (ii) 2, (iii) 3, (iv) 4, (v) 5, (vi) 6, (vii) 7, (viii) SEO, (ix) HEO, (x) administrative trainee, (xi) EO, (xii), CO and (xiii) CA.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The latest available figures for the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, including the Overseas Development Administration, are as follows:

Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the new institutions of the CSCE; and if he will list their forthcoming meetings.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: At the meeting of the CSCE Council of Ministers in Prague on 30 and 31 January the CSCE's office for free elections was given broader functions and renamed as the office for democratic institutions and human rights.

The council also agreed on new functions for the conflict prevention centre; and that the committee of senior officials will henceforth meet more frequently and from time to time as an economic forum.

These changes which, together with a new programme of CSCE meetings, will be further discussed at the CSCE follow-up meeting in Helsinki from 24 March to 10 July 1992, are intended to continue the adaptation of the CSCE to enable it more effectively to promote human rights, democracy and the rule of law, to engage in crisis management and conflict resolution and to encourage the transition to market economies.

Cambodia

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy towards Cambodia; and what measures he has taken and proposes to take to promote peace in that country.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We support the agreements on a comprehensive political settlement of the Cambodia conflict signed in Paris last October. The United Kingdom played an active part in the negotiations leading up to these agreements. We will continue to work both through the United Nations and bilaterally to ensure that the agreements are implemented fully.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Customs

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans there are to establish a dedicated computerised intelligence network across Europe for the Customs service.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: A new customs information system—CIS—is being developed for use across the European Community. It is planned to use the existing system customs enforcement network—SCENT—as a carrier for the CIS, which is being developed in phases.

The first phase will be in place later this year, and will provide encrypted computer messaging facilities at all main ports and airports in the European Community. A central database willl be added to this system in the second phase, providing specific intelligence about potential customs offences, and information on recent smuggling trends. In the light of experience from the first two phases, consideration will be given to enhancing the system to incorporate CIS facilities into national computer systems, with the possibility of eventually establishing a fully integrated system.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what were the start-up costs of the secure customs enforcement network; and what are its annual running costs since it became operational.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Over the first three years of the system, commencing in 1986, EC Commission spending to launch the system totalled approximately 300,000 ecu. More recent figures from the Commission are not readily obtainable except at disproportionate cost.

The United Kingdom's Intervention Board executive agency recently installed a terminal at a total cost of £900·71, including first quarter running costs of £55·83.

Running costs for the Customs and Excise terminal have totalled £4,987·67 from the time of installation in late 1987 to 8 December 1991.

More recent or detailed figures are not available except at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the purpose of the secure customs enforcement network; when it was established; and which authorities have access to the system.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: SCENT was developed in response to increasing needs for exchange of information between customs operational investigation services in the European Community. It has an electronic encrypted mailing system, the facility to send messages to telex machines and it provides access to databases of reference information such as Lloyds Seadata. Initiated by the Commission towards the end of 1986, SCENT became operational from 1987 onwards.

Access to the system is strictly controlled, and limited to authorised users. Most terminals are used by customs services. Others are allocated to the Commission's directorate general XXI for work on customs questions or movements of drugs precursor chemicals and directorate general VI for common agricultural policy work. The United Kingdom Intervention Board executive agency and its equivalent bodies in other member states have access to the system. The other two users are the International Narcotics Control Board and the United Nations, which has one terminal.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many terminals are connected to the secure Customs enforcement network; and what plans there are to expand access to the system.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: There are currently 29 terminals in use, two of which are in the United Kingdom. It is planned to increase the total number of terminals to about 200, most of which should be installed by the end of 1992. Of these, 25 should be sited in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many passengers who are United Kingdom citizens returning from Brussels on the 18 February at Heathrow on flight BA 0397 were questioned by Customs and Excise; and what was the result of the questioning.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 24 February 1992]: I regret that the information requested is not available. Customs at Heathrow deal with large numbers of passengers and passengers from different sources pass through customs controls simultaneously. No record is kept of individual passenger challenges except where seizures or search of person result.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the rates of VAT charged in each other EC country for (a) food in shops, (b) food in restaurants, (c) books, (d) magazines, (e) newspapers, (f) household fuel, (g) rents, (h) house purchase, (i) children's clothing (j) community centres and (k) transport fares.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: In 1990, the latest year for which estimates are available, some 57 per cent. of consumers' expenditure was standard rated, a further 22 per cent. was exempt and 12 per cent. was zero rated.

Income Statistics

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the latest estimates of (a) original, (b) gross, (c) disposable and (d) post-tax income, by decile, in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Maude: The information, derived from the 1989 family expenditure survey, is given in the table:

Motor Taxation

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total revenue from motor taxation in 1991-92; and what is his estimated revenue for 1992-93 divided into its constituent parts, for the United Kingdom.

Mr. Maude: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, East (Mr. Prescott) on 4 February 1992, at column 100. Revised estimates for 1991-92, and figures for 1992-93 will be given in the Financial Statement and Budget Report.

Alcoholic Beverages

Dr. Marek: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects to receive the European Commission study on the possible distortion of competition between different alcoholic beverages as a result of the proposed European excise structure.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 21 February 1992]: I have not been advised of a date for publication of the Commission study.

Income Tax

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the objective of the married couples allowance; and what assessment he has made of the effect of the married couples allowance for couples where both partners have the same level of gross income.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 25 February 1992]: The married couple's allowance is intended to recognise the special responsibilities associated with marriage, which can encompass a variety of dependent relationships. The effect of the allowance is the same whatever the relative level of income of the partners, provided they earn enough to make use of their allowances.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will review the application form for disability living allowance with a view to making it shorter and less complicated.

Mr. Hanley: The form has been carefully designed to be both clear to the applicant and to allow applicants to explain fully the limitations on their abilities. It will, however, be kept under review to enable improvements to be identified and made as and when necessary.

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what consultation took place with general medical practitioners or welfare advice groups during the preparation of the application forms for the disability living allowance;

(2) what evaluations or tests of the application forms for disability living allowance were made prior to their publication.

Mr. Hanley: Extensive consultation was carried out in Great Britain and Northern Ireland before the final version of the disability living allowance application form was determined. This included consultation with the British Medical Association and various disability and welfare groups and the testing of draft forms with disabled people. The resulting form has been specifically designed for completion by disabled people, with clear layout and large print.

Fair Employment

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps have been taken by the Social Security Agency to appoint equality officers to ensure that fair employment legislation and sex discrimination legislation is being adhered to in relation to all staff appointments.

Mr. Hanley: The Civil Service Commissioners for Northern Ireland are responsible for the selection of all permanent non-industrial staff appointed to the Northern Ireland civil service, including the Social Security Agency. The selection procedures adopted take account of equal opportunity legislation. The Department of Health and Social Services, within which the agency operates, has in place a departmental equal opportunities officer to ensure that the equal opportunities policies of the NICS are put into effect.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps have been taken by the area health and social services boards to appoint equality officers to ensure that fair employment and sex discrimination legislation is being adhered to in relation to all staff appointments.

Mr. Hanley: An equal opportunities unit has been established in each health and social services board since 1988. The primary responsibility of these units is to ensure that equality of opportunity policy of their board is applied to all staff regardless of religious affiliation, gender or disability. These units are also responsible for ensuring that the provisions of the fair employment legislation are applied to all staff.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps have been taken to ensure that persons involved in interview panels in the area health and social services boards are adequately briefed about employment legislation to ensure equality under the Fair Employment (NI) Act 1989 and the Sex Discrimination (NI) Order 1988.

Mr. Hanley: Each of the health and social services boards organises courses and seminars for staff involved in selection and appointments to ensure its policy of equality of opportunity is applied regardless of religious affiliation, gender or disability and to explain how the provisions of the fair employment legislation apply to staff in post and to applicants and appointees.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps have been taken to publish the religious breakdown of companies, organisations and businesses in accordance with requirements of the fair employment legislation.

Mr. Needham: The Fair Employment Commission has made public its intention to publish information on the composition of individual private sector concerns with more than 25 employees and specified public authorities. The date and manner of publication have not yet been decided.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the Fair Employment Commission will publish its report into employment practices in the colleges of further education located within the Belfast education and library board.

Mr. Needham: The Fair Employment Commission has forwarded a draft report of its investigation into teaching staff in further education colleges in Belfast to the Belfast education and library board. The board's formal response is awaited by the commission.

The commission plans to publish the report when this response has been received and considered.

Industrial Development Board

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the names of the companies assisted by the Industrial Development Board which located factories in each of the district council areas in Northern Ireland from 1 April 1991 to 31 December 1991.

Mr. Needham: Four new inward investment projects were secured in this period. Three of them, Vision Information Consulting Ltd., Audio Processing Technology Ltd. and the Royal Mail returned letters centre, will be located in Belfast city council area. The fourth, involving HM Customs and Excise, will be located in Derry city and Fermanagh district council areas. The Royal Mail and HM Customs and Excise projects were secured without selective financial assistance.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many jobs were created by the Industrial Development Board in each district council area in Northern Ireland from 1 April 1991 to 31 December 1991.

Mr. Needham: Information in terms of jobs created is not readily available and could be compiled only at disproportionate cost. The number of new jobs promoted in the period, by district council area, is shown in the table.

DOE Liaison Office, Killyleagh

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he will issue a statement in relation to the siting of a Department of the Environment liaison office at Killyleagh, County Down.

Mr. Needham: Following a detailed process of consultation the Department of Environment for Northern Ireland recently issued a statement on the management structure for Strangford Lough. This statement made it clear that the location of the liaison office would be a matter for the Strangford Lough management committee which is now being set up.

Income Support

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many claimants in receipt of income support were having deductions made for (a) social fund loans, (b) fuel costs, (c) in respect of assumed rent and rate contributions from other members of the household and (d) other deductions on 1 January at each social security agency in Northern Ireland; and what were the figures on 1 January 1991 and 1 January 1989.

Mr. Hanley: Social Security operational matters are the responsibility of Mr. Alec Wylie, chief executive of the Social Security Agency. He will write to the hon. Gentleman and copies of his reply will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Strangford Lough

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he will issue the draft order in respect of the management of Strangford Lough.

Mr. Needham: The proposals relating to the establishment of a management structure for Strangford

Lough included in the Departments' recently produced statement do not require the making of an order to bring them into effect.

Social Security (Deductions)

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many claimants were having (a) one deduction made, (b) two deductions made and (c) three deductions or more made on 1 January at each social security office in Northern Ireland; and what were the figures on 1 January 1991 and 1 January 1989.

Mr. Hanley: Social Security operational matters are the responsibility of Mr. Alec Wylie, chief executive of the Social Security Agency. However, I understand that the information is not held centrally and therefore cannot be supplied on grounds of disproportionate cost.

Under-fives

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to introduce an under-fives initiative in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The report of an interdepartmental review of policy and services for the under-fives is expected later this year. As part of its work, the group conducting the review has commissioned research aimed at quantifying the demand for provision for the under-fives and at improving the information available on the needs and preferences of parents and children. Work is also well advanced on the preparation of a draft children (NI) order. This, among other things, will provide a clearer legislative framework for the development of services for the under-fives and will strengthen procedures for the regulation of day care services, bringing them broadly into line with those introduced in the Children Act 1989.

Messrs Hartstones Ltd

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what funds have been made available by the Industrial Development Board in each of the past three years to Messrs Hartstones Ltd. for its Berkshire plant in Newtownards; if the grant-aided plant and machinery is still on site; and if he will make a statement on the redundancies recently announced at this factory.

Mr. Needham: In August 1989 the IDB made an offer of assistance of £1,045,200 to Berkshire Hosiery (UK) Ltd., a subsidiary of the Hartstone Group plc. The assistance was provided to support a major re-equipment project aimed at securing existing employment and the future development of the company.

Since that time some £809,078 of grant has been paid to Berkshire Hosiery (UK) Ltd.—£205,039 in 1989-90, £550,379 in 1990-91 and £53,660 in 1991-92. No grant was paid directly to the Hartstone Group plc.

At present all of the grant-aided plant and machinery remains on site.

I regret the loss of jobs in the hosiery operation which have arisen from overcapacity in the group. The company has indicated to the Industrial Development Board that its activities at Newtownards will be concentrated on its successful sock business.

HSS Trusts

Mr. Arbuthnot: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many expressions of interest in becoming HSS trusts he has received; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: Eleven expressions of interest have been received and I have decided to invite all the sponsors to make formal applications to become HSS trusts in April 1993. The services involved are:

Belfast City Hospital
Craigavon Area Hospitals Group
Down and Lisburn Unit of Management
Eastern Board Ambulance Service
Green Park Unit of Management
Mater Infirmorum Hospital
Newry and Mourne Unit of Management
North Down and Ards Community Unit
North and West Belfast Community
South and East Belfast Community Unit
Ulster, North Down and Ards Hospitals Unit

Training Schemes

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the most recent information he has on the destination of people who leave the job training programme; how many leavers got jobs, became unemployed or went on to further training; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: The most recent information available on the destination of participants leaving the job training programme is for the period 1 April 1991 to 31 December 1991 and is as follows:

JTP leavers whose destination is known	Number of people	Percentage of total
Found work	1,279	42
Unemployed	1,380	45
Further training	334	19
Further education	67	2

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Agricultural Land

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what factors he takes into account before consenting to the short-term letting of agricultural land under section 5 of the Agricultural Holdings Act 1986; and how many consents he has granted in each year since 1986.

Mr. Curry: Consent to short-term lettings under section 5 of the Agricultural Holdings Act 1986 is granted where it would be unreasonable to expect a landlord to let land on a full agricultural tenancy. The main circumstances which would satisfy this requirement were agreed with the industry and are as follows. Within this broad framework each case is considered according to individual circumstances. The categories outlined are not definitive and applications for consent on other grounds may be considered.

(a) Land for Development

When land is likely to go out of use within five to seven years, the compensation payable by the landlord on the termination of a full agricultural tenancy could exceed the amount of rent paid. In these circumstances approval of a short-term letting would normally be justified.

(b) Reorganisation and transitional arrangements
Approval may be given for a short-term letting for up to five years:

(i) if a landowner is planning the amalgamation or regrouping of the holding; or
(ii) if a prospective purchaser is to work the land before completion of sale; or
(iii) if a landlord wishes to make temporary arrangements pending a decision on the future use of the land, for example, if a tenant has died and the landlord wishes to make temporary arrangements before re-letting or selling; or
(iv) where a landlord wishes to give a person who is not an established or experienced tenant a period of trial before concluding a full tenancy; or
(v) where there is a definite intention that a landlord's son or daughter will take over a vacant holding within five years.

A further application involving the same parties on the same land can only be approved if there has been a material alteration in the circumstances.

(c) Specialist cropping
Approval may be given to a short-term letting to a specialist grower for a single crop requiring "clean land" for example, potatoes, carrots, brassicas, beans, bulbs. Consent may also be given for the growing of a crop, not normally grown on the holding, to be grown as a cleaner crop. A consent will normally be for one year only unless the specialist crop requires a longer period.

(d) Allotments
If allotment land is temporarily surplus to requirements approval will normally be given to a short-term letting.

(e) Operational requirements on Government and other land
Approval may also be given to a short-term letting where some agricultural use of the land is possible and desirable but a full agricultural tenancy is ruled out by operational or training requirements which affect the use of the land. This applies particularly, but not exclusively, to land owned by the Ministry of Defence.

The number of consents granted in England under section 5 since 1986 is as follows:

Year ending 28 February	Number
1986	205
1987	221
1988	287
1989	300
1990	397
1991	468

EC Surplus Food Scheme

Mr. Alison: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what arrangements he is making for the implementation of the EC surplus food scheme in the United Kingdom in 1992-93; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: In its report on the operation of the first two years of this scheme the European Commission accepted that, judged as a food surplus disposal exercise, the scheme is inevitably expensive when compared with other mean of surplus disposal. However, it concluded that the facility to operate the scheme should continue to be available to member states.

The Government endorse the view that the scheme is not a satisfactory method of dealing with surpluses and of assisting those whom it should help. Nevertheless, the Government believe that eligible United Kingdom citizens should continue to have the opportunity of benefiting from the scheme in 1992-93.

For 1992, the Commission has, as in 1991, allocated some 150 mecu to the scheme for the European Community as a whole. The United Kingdom has maintained its share, some 25 mecu, which represents about £17·9 million worth of butter and beef.

The scheme already makes produce available in the United Kingdom to certain clearly defined categories of people. These are:

—those in receipt of income support or family credit
—the homeless and destitute
—those living in welfare hostels

We have decided to add to those recipients of the disability working allowance within the categories of those eligible.

Pensioners or the unemployed are eligible if they fall into one or other of these categories.

Agriculture departments will be inviting charitable and other non-profit making organisations wishing to take part in the distribution to apply for designation. Organisations will have the usual six weeks to submit their application. To improve the cost-effectiveness of the scheme, the designation of organisations will be for a period of two years. Preference will continue to be given to organisations providing meals for the homeless and those capable of distributing produce widely throughout their local Community.

We are arranging for further details to be publicised widely and to be sent to the appropriate bodies. Copies of this information have been placed in the Libraries.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Newspaper Merger

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received concerning the merger of North London News and Capital Newspapers; when he expects the report for the Monopolies and Mergers Commission; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: I have received an application for my consent to the transfer to EMAP plc of a controlling interest in Capital Newspapers Ltd. In this case I have discretion either to refer the matter to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission or to give consent without such a reference. Representations from third parties have been invited but none has yet been received.

Home Equity Loan Plans

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what initiatives he plans to assist those people threatened with the loss of their homes as a result of home equity loan plans that are no longer viable.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 21 February 1992]: The Securities and Investments Board has put arrangements in place to ensure that information about problem cases is brought quickly to the attention of all bodies who may be able to help.

People in difficulties should contact the appropriate Financial Services Act regulator and also the mortgage lender to discuss repayment and interest terms, and the investors compensation scheme if the investment firm has been declared in default and claims are being considered.

Development Assistance

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list (a) the grants and (b) other advantageous terms available to firms sited within areas with development status and those with assisted area status.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 25 February 1992]: There are two main grant schemes available to businesses in the assisted areas of Great Britain. Regional selective assistance is available throughout the assisted areas and regional enterprise grants are available in development areas and the intermediate areas of Derbyshire, South Yorkshire, Plymouth and Fife which are covered by the European Community RESIDER and RENAVAL programmes. Also, consultancy support under the enterprise initiative is given at a higher rate in the assisted areas; and grants or loans may be made by the relevant Secretary of State towards the improvement of basic services.

In addition, English Estates, and other agencies in Scotland and Wales, have programmes for the provision of industrial and commercial premises in the assisted areas.

Low-energy Lighting

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will make it his policy progressively to introduce low-energy lighting in all the buildings operated by his Department.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 25 February 1992]: It is my Department's policy to install low-energy lighting wherever it is practicable and the costs are justified.

Ceramic Industry

Mrs. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will give full details of the support offered to the ceramic and allied industry by the fairs and promotion branch for each of the last 13 years.

Mr. Sainsbury: Details of support for events organised by the British Ceramic Manufacturers Federation are not readily available prior to 1983-84. A table showing support follows. In 1990-91 the federation was offered support for one event in Frankfurt, but declined the offer. No application for support was made for 1991-92.

Financial year	Number of exhibitors	Financial support £
1983-84	47	41,617
1984-85	48	52,001
1985-86	22	28,165
1986-87	19	9,286
1987-88	19	19,500
1988-89	21	16,358
1989-90	24	26,267

In addition to receiving assistance at events organised by the federation, companies in the industry receive assistance at other DTI-supported events. However, records are not kept in a format to readily identify the number of such companies and the amount of support.

EMPLOYMENT

Job Vacancies

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what were the registered job vacancies at employment centres in the Tooting constituency on 18 February.

Mr. Jackson: On 3 January 1992, the latest date for which figures are available, the number of unfilled vacancies at the jobcentres covering the Tooting parliamentary constituency was 58.

(a) 11,148,000 dependent children (under age 16 years),
(b) 3,698,000 children under age five years,
(c) 3,685,000 working mothers (aged 16-59),

Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish (a) the total number of and (b) estimated expenditure by overseas visitors to (i) London, (ii) England and (iii) the United Kingdom in each year since 1980.

Mr. Forth: The required figures are as follows:

Sign Language

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what sign language facilities are available to allow deaf persons to take up employment in the Employment Service;

(2) how many staff employed in jobcentres have sign language skills.

Mr. Jackson: Questions on operational matters in the Employment Service executive agency are the responsibility of Mike Fogden, the agency's chief executive, to whom I have referred this question for reply.

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what support is available to deaf people on Government training schemes by way of sign language practitioners.

Mr. Jackson: Training and enterprise councils' resources include funding to support communication services for eligible deaf people on government funded training programmes. These services are also provided at two specialist residential training colleges for the deaf, which are also funded by the Employment Department.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will provide the latest figures for people who are long-term unemployed in (a) Leyton constituency, (b) Waltham Forest, (c) London and (d) nationally.

Mr. Jackson: The latest available information, relating to January 1992, is contained in the following table and can also be obtained from the NOMIS database system in the Library.

Area	Number of long-term unemployed
Leyton parliamentary constituency	1,709
Waltham Forest local authority district	3,796
Greater London	108,361
United Kingdom	746,977

[1] Unemployment figures by duration are produced quarterly and are on the unadjusted basis. The definition of long-term unemployed is those people unemployed for one year or more.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Welsh Police Forces

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on manning levels of rural police forces in Wales.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The latest figures for police establishments and strength for the four Welsh police forces are as follows:

	Current establishment	Establishment 1 April 1992	Current strength (as at 30 November 1991)
Dyfed-Powys	944	969	948
Gwent	1,009	1,010	1,001
North Wales	1,352	1,369	1,342
South Wales	3,168	3,168	3,145

Television Reception

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy for reception of both Channel 4 television and S4C to be available throughout Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: It is not possible at present to broadcast both Channel 4 television and Sianel Pedwar Cymru throughout Wales, because there are insufficient available frequencies.

Traffic Offences (Camera Detection)

Sir Philip Goodhart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to bring forward regulations for type approved camera equipment to help with deterring and detecting speeding and traffic light offenders.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No camera equipment has yet completed the necessary laboratory tests. I cannot anticipate the outcome of these tests.

Sir Philip Goodhart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much money he is making available to the police in the coming financial year for (a)

the purchase of red light and speed camera equipment and (b) the purchase of computer equipment and software to make use of such camera equipment.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We do not make allocations of grant for specific items of equipment. In 1992-93 the available provision of capital grant and credit approvals will support expenditure by provincial forces of £111·3 million on vehicles, equipment and minor building works. It is for police authorities to determine how this money should be used.

Ethnic Minorities

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will extend the existing section 11 grants for 1991-92 for education purposes at the same rate to the end of the academic year 1991-92;

(2) what was the total sum (a) bid for and (b) allowed for grants to Bradford council for 1992-93 under section 11;

(3) what representations he has received from Bradford council on the future of section 11 grants;

(4) what total sums at 1991 prices were paid to Bradford council in each of the last five years under the provisions of section 11 on (a) education items and (b) all other services.

Mrs. Rumbold: Under new arrangements which were announced in October 1990 and which are designed to ensure that payments of grant under section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966 are targeted so as to achieve maximum benefit for members of ethnic minorities, local authorities were required to bid afresh by 30 April 1991 for all future funding from 1 April 1992. Local authorities were notified in December of the outcome of applications and it is not possible to extend previous funding in the way in which the hon. Member suggests.

Bradford council submitted applications for projects commencing on 1 April amounting in a full year to grant of £7·3 million at 1990-91 prices. Approximately £6 million, at 1992-93 prices, is expected to be paid in grant in 1992-93.

As the hon. Member is aware, my right hon. Friend the Minister of State, Department of Education and Science and I will shortly be meeting representatives of the local authority, together with the hon. Member and his hon. Friends the Members for Bradford, South (Mr. Cryer) and for Bradford, West (Mr. Madden).

In the last five years for which figures are available, the amount of grant paid to Bradford council, expressed at 1990-91 prices, was approximately as follows:

Year	£ million
1986-87	6·1
1987-88	5·9
1988-89	6·2
1989-90	6·9
1990-91	6·5

It is not possible to give a precise breakdown between grant to support education and other services. In general, it is estimated that education provision accounted for approximately 80 per cent. of the total grant.

Magistrates Courts

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will publish the White Paper on the future organisation of the magistrates courts as announced in his answer to the hon. Member for Tynemouth (Mr. Trotter) on 19 December, Official Report, columns 250-51.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: My noble and learned Friend the Lord Chancellor, who is to take responsibility for the magistrates courts service from 1 April, and I have today published the White Paper "A New Framework for Local Justice", and copies have been placed in the Library of the House.

Police Manpower

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will state his reasons for rejecting the application of the South Wales police authority for an increase of 44 posts.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My right hon. Friend takes decisions on applications for increases in police establishments from police authorities in the light of the professional advice of Her Majesty's chief inspector of constabulary. This advice takes account of, among other things, the relative needs of different forces as indicated by the manpower formula, the efficiency with which existing manpower is used, and the extent of any vacancies. The formula indicates that south Wales is relatively well provided at present, compared with other forces.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give the number of additional uniformed officers excluding special constables that have been authorised to be added to the strength of the West Yorkshire police each year from 1975 to 1991 shown (a) in total and (b) by police station.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Increases in the police establishment for West Yorkshire police for the years in question are as follows. Allocations to individual police stations is a matter for the chief constable, and this information is not held centrally.

Year	Number of police posts approved
1975	1
1981	50
1987	50
1988	23
1989	32
1990	20
1991	16

Hampshire Constabulary

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was (a) the establishment of the Hampshire constabulary both police and civilians and (b) the number of police per head of population in Hampshire in the financial year 1990-91; and what is the (i) estimated establishment of the Hampshire constabulary, both police and civilians and (ii) the estimated number of police per head of population in Hampshire in the financial year 1991-92.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The available information, relating to the police establishment authorised by the Home Secretary and the civilian strength, is as follows:

	1990-91	1991-92
Police establishment	3,175	3,202
Civilian strength	[1]994	[2]1,039
Population per officer	528	[3]524

[1] As at 31 March 1991.
[2] As at 31 December 1991.
[3] On the basis of latest population figures at mid-1990, provided by the OPCS.

Convicted Criminals (Confessions)

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answers of 5 February 1992, Official Report, column 163, and 14 February 1992, Official Report, column 664-65, if he will call for a report from the chief constables of Cheshire, Greater Manchester, Merseyside, North Yorkshire, South Yorkshire, West Yorkshire and the West Midlands as to how many detectives were employed during 1990-91 obtaining voluntary admissions from convicted criminals.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is not available.

Departmental Staff

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the total number of employees in his Department; and how many are (a) black and (b) disabled.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The figures to which the hon. Member refers can be found in various reports published by the Treasury and the Office of the Minister for the Civil Service. These record that on 1 April 1991 the Home Office employed 41,994 non-industrial staff. Of those who responded to ethnic origin surveys carried out by the Department, 1,085 classified themselves as being of ethnic minority origin, representing 5·3 per cent. of the total number who responded. The Home Office employs 183 registered disabled persons, representing 0·4 per cent. of the total number of non-industrial staff.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish a table showing the number of (a) men and (b) women in his Department in each of grades (i) 1, (ii) 2, (iii) 3, (iv) 4, (v) 5, (vi) 6, (vii) 7, (viii) SEO, (ix) HEO, (x) Administrative Trainee, (xi) EO, (xii) CO and (xiii) CA.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The April 1991 figures for men and women in grades 1 to 4 and SEO to AA were included in Her Majesty's Treasury's "Civil Service Statistics". This did not include an analysis of grades 5 to 7 and AT/HEODs. The nearest equivalent figures for these grades are at December 1990, as follows:

	Men	Women	Total
Grade 5	70	16	86
Grade 6	80	5	85
Grade 7	394	91	485
AT/HEOD	6	12	18

Northallerton Prison

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects the refurbishment and improvement works in the vulnerable prisoner unit, Her Majesty's prison, Northallerton to be completed.

Mrs. Rumbold: Most of the work is expected to be completed by August 1992, and the remainder by March 1993.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Teachers' Pay

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will tabulate the salary increases of teachers from 1979; and if he will relate these to the annual rate of inflation for the same period.

Mr. Fallon: Increases in teachers' average salaries since 1979 are as follows. These take account of incremental drift and the full-year effect of increases in the number and value of incentive allowances. The Government propose to implement the recommendations of the school teachers review body for teachers' pay in 1992-93. This would increase the pay bill by 7·8 per cent. in that year.

	Teachers' average salaries[1] (cash) £	Percentage increase since 1979 (real terms)[2]

[2] Real terms percentage changes calculated on the basis of movements in the all items retail prices index.
[3] Average salary at highest value in calendar year, except for 1991 where the effect of staging the settlement is shown separately for April and December.
[4] December 1991, when the second stage of the 1991-92 pay settlement was implemented.

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many teachers, and at what grades, he expects to earn more than £20,280 during the next financial year following the recent pay review body report.

Mr. Fallon: We estimate that approximately 182,000 teachers, some 47 per cent., will earn more than £20,280 per annum when the pay rises recommended by the school teachers review body take effect. Of these, some 28,000 will be head teachers, 31,000 deputy head teachers, 119,000 classroom teachers paid on the standard scale holding an incentive allowance, and the remaining 4,000 teachers paid on the standard scale with the addition of both the inner London allowance and the inner London discretionary supplement.

Dyslexia

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the training given to teachers to deal with dyslexia.

Mr. Fallon: All courses of initial teacher training are now required to equip prospective teachers to teach the full range of pupils whom they are likely to encounter in an ordinary school and to introduce them to ways of identifying children with special education needs, including dyslexia. The Council for the Accreditation of Teacher Education has also been asked to consider dyslexia specifically in its inquiry into the preparation of student teachers to teach reading. Its report will be published shortly. In-service training is also available for teachers of pupils with dyslexia. Training of teachers of pupils with special education needs in ordinary schools is one of the priorities supported by the Department through the grants for education support and training programme. The Department has also sponsored the production of an audio-visual pack aimed to assist teachers in ordinary schools to identify children with special education needs, one module of which is specifically concerned with dyslexia.

Sign Language

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) how many courses are run for sign language learners; and what plans he has to extend this number;

(2) whether he has any plans to increase the level of sign language support in mainstream schools;

(3) how many registered sign language practitioners there are in (a) Yorkshire and Humberside and (b) the United Kingdom.

Mr. Fallon: The Education Act 1981 places the responsibility for making appropriate educational provision for children with special education needs on each local education authority. It is not for the Government to prescribe which form of communication should be employed in schools where there are pupils with hearing impairments, nor the level of support they require. Such decisions are best made in the light of local needs and circumstances.

Information is not available centrally about the number of courses for sign language learners or the number of registered sign language practitioners.

Statements of Attainment

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, pursuant to his answer of 3 February, Official Report, column 42, how he proposes to ensure comparability between English courses; what regulation he proposes to make to ensure that the omission of statements of attainment from examination does not change the range, competence or quality of the examination offered; and what regulatory body will be responsible for supervising such regulations.

Mr. Eggar: The School Examinations and Assessment Council will shortly be issuing criteria in English and the other core subjects with which the examining bodies will need to comply in drawing up syllabuses for the assessment of pupils starting key stage 4 courses from September 1992 for first examination in summer 1994. I am satisfied that these will ensure the broad comparability between syllabuses which will be required by the national curriculum assessment arrangements, to be specified in orders due to be made later this year, while giving scope for a certain amount of variation.

Higher Education

Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish the proportion of school leavers going into higher education in (a) each London borough, (b) Greater London, (c) outer London, (d) inner London and (e) England for each year from 1980-81 to 1990-91.

Mr. Howarth: The proportions of school leavers from maintained schools whose intended destinations for the three-year period ending 1989-90 was a university or polytechnic course, for the areas requested, were as shown in the table. Information for earlier years is not readily available and to provide it would involve disproportionate cost. Information for 1990-91 is not yet available.

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much money has been given in grants to the National Union of Students in the United Kingdom in each of the last five years.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The National Union of Students is not supported by central Government grant.

Examination Statistics

Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will publish the percentage of young people, as a proportion of school leavers, achieving (i) one or more grade G or better, (ii) five or more grade G or better and (iii) five or more grade C or better at GCSE/O-level/CSE in (a) each London borough/ILEA, (b) Greater London, (c) outer London, (d) inner London and (e) England for each year from 1980-81 to 1991-92;

(2) if he will publish the percentage of young people, as a proportion of the 17-year-old age group, achieving (i) one or more passes and (ii) three or more passes at A-level in (a) each London borough/ILEA, (b) Greater London, (c) outer London, (d) inner London and (e) England for each year from 1980-81 to 1990-91.

Mr. Eggar: The table shows the proportions of school leavers from maintained schools with the specified achievements in GCSE/O-level/CSE or A-level, according to the areas requested, for the three-year period ending 1989-90. Information for earlier years is not readily available and to provide it would involve disproportionate cost. Information for 1990-91 and 1991-92 is not yet available.

Mr. Fallon: The full-time equivalent numbers of qualified teachers in maintained primary, middle and secondary schools in Leeds local education authority in January of each year are shown in the table. Information on constituency areas is not held centrally.

Student Statistics

Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish the proportion of students aged (a) 16, (b) 17 and (c) 16 and 17 years participating in full-time or part-time education in (i) each London borough, (ii) Greater London, (iii) outer London, (iv) inner London and (v) England for each year since 1980-81.

Mr. Eggar: Data for students aged 16 and 17 separately for the years 1979-80 to 1989-90 for ILEA, individual outer London boroughs, the total of outer London boroughs and England are contained in DES statistics bulletins 9/86 and 14/91. Data for Greater London from 1981-82 to 1989-90 are available in bulletins 6/87 and 14/91. Copies of these bulletins are available in the Library. Data for individual inner London boroughs are not available because ILEA was the responsible education authority until 1 April 1990. The participation rates shown exclude independent schools.

Free School Meals

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many children are not currently eligible for free school meals but would have been before the Social Security Act 1986; and what would be the gross and net costs of restoring their right to free school meals.

Mr. Fallon: A variety of local education authority discretionary schemes existed prior to the implementation of the Social Security Act 1986. Consequently, it is not possible to estimate the number of children who would now be eligible for free school meals on that basis.

Adult Students

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many adult students have been or are at present on access courses leading to higher education during the years 1989-90, 1990-91, and 1991-92 in England.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 25 February 1992]: There has been a rapid growth in the number of access courses leading to higher education in recent years. Recorded student numbers show that there were 7,000 students aged 19 or over on such courses in November 1989 and 10,000 in November 1990. Data for 1991 are not yet available.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Development Assistance

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will give an estimate for 1991 of the ratio of Britain's official development assistance to gross national product.

Mrs. Chalker: For 1991 we expect to at least maintain the average aid-GNP ratio of the previous four years of 0·30 per cent.—an indication that the overseas aid budget has in recent years been growing broadly in line with the economy.

EC Aid Programmes

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what has been the increase since 1979 in Britain's contribution to the European Community's aid programmes.

Mrs. Chalker: In 1979, our contribution was £118 million, while in 1990, which is the latest year for which we have final figures, it was £333 million. That is an increase of over 180 per cent. in cash terms, or over 25 per cent. in real terms. The European Community is an increasingly important channel for our aid. We are devoting considerable time and attention to ensuring that the quality of this aid increases in line with the quantities involved.

International Organisations

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 30 January, Official Report, columns 649-52, what was the percentage change (a) between 1979 and 1990, and (b) between 1989 and 1990 in the United Kingdom's contribution in 1990 prices to (i) the International Labour Organisation, (ii) the Food and Agriculture Organisation, (iii) the International Food and Agriculture Development, (iv) the United Nations Development Programme, (v) the World Food Programme, (vi) UNICEF, (vii) the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, (viii) the United Nations Food for Population Articles and (ix) the United Nations Environmental Programme.

Mrs. Chalker: The figures requested are as follows:

Organisations	Percentage change
	1979-1990	1989-1990
International Labour Organisation	19·7	−3·3
Food and Agriculture Organisation	73·7	3·3
International Fund for Agricultural Development	—	−24·5
United Nations Development Programme	−57·5	−3·6
World Food Programme	[1]—	−76·2
United Nations Children's Fund	−43·7	−29·7
United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees	−2·9	−6·7
United Nations Fund for Population Activities	[2]−65·3	[2]−49·6
United Nations Environmental Programme	124·3	−7·6

[1] Contributions to the World Food Programme include subscription payments, commodity purchase and, from 1987, food aid. Prior to 1987 the food aid channelled through WFP could not be distinguished from other food aid, and therefore is not included in this table.

[2] Contributions to UNFPA are paid in two instalments per financial year, but only one was paid in the calendar year 1990. The balance of £3 million was paid in February 1991.

PRIME MINISTER

Sports Clubs

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Prime Minister whether he intends to extend to England, Scotland and Wales legislation which would require cricket clubs, bowling clubs, yacht clubs, football clubs, etc., to furnish to the police copies of the annual general meeting of the club, or of the meetings of the committee of management or governing body of the club, on the lines of current legislation applying in Northern Ireland.

The Prime Minister: No.

Olympic Games

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the outcome of his further meeting with representatives of the Manchester Olympic bid committee.

The Prime Minister: I am delighted to announce that the Government are backing Manchester's Olympic bid. We will be committing £55 million towards the bid and provision of sports facilities in advance of the nomination. This will contribute to the construction of the Olympic arena and a national cycling arena and will allow us to acquire and prepare the Olympic stadium site.

We aim to use the games to spearhead the regeneration of east Manchester. We will now work urgently with Manchester city council to identify how the full range of Government programmes can be brought to bear for the regeneration of the area and the best arrangements for securing delivery of this and the Olympic facilities themselves.

Success cannot be guaranteed: the competition will be intense. But we intend to win.

DEFENCE

Nuclear Testing

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish the results of the atmospheric tests following the British nuclear teast codenamed Rousanne at the Nevada test site in 1981 as they relate to the amount of radioactive material vented to the atmosphere.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There was no venting from the 1981 British test, codenamed Rousanne.

RAF Valley

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future of the air sea rescue service based at RAF Valley, following his statement made on 19 February about defence equipment.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Final decisions on the structure of the RAF search and rescue force have yet to be taken. I cannot, therefore, comment on the possible implications for individual search and rescue flights.

Service Men (Pay)

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the percentage change in real terms in the pay upon appointment of (a) a field marshal, (b) major generals, (c) colonels, (d) captains, (e) second lieutenants, (f) sergeants, (g) corporals and (h) privates between 1970-71 and 1979-80, and 1979-80 to the latest convenient date.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The percentage changes in real terms in pay upon appointment are set out in the table.

Monmouth Borough Council

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many hearing aids were provided free by each health authority in Wales in 1989, 1990 and 1991;

(2) if he will list those health authorities in Wales which charge patients for the supply of replacement hearing aids when the original has been lost or mislaid.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: This information is not held centrally.

However, where hearing aids are supplied to patients on loan, the health authority has discretion to charge for the cost of replacement for lost equipment.

Listed Building, Chepstow

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement about the recent destruction of rich archaeological deposits under a listed building in Bridge street, Chepstow.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Works on buildings requiring listed building consent are primarily a matter for local planning authorities, in this case Monmouth borough council.

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received regarding proposals to introduce charges for car parking at Nevill Hall hospital, Abergavenny.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: I have received one representation concerning these proposals.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The information is not available centrally.

Home Ownership Schemes

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales of the transferable discount housing schemes operational in Wales, how many provide properties that have been purchased (a) within the schemes' boundaries and (b) outside the schemes' boundaries; and if he will publish a list of the number of properties within each category.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The available data relate to the pilot scheme in Cardiff which provided seven grants to tenants to purchase properties, all in the authority's area.

Empty Housing

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many furnished properties owned by (a) local authorities and (b) housing associations in Wales have remained empty for more than six months.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The information is not available centrally.

A487

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects work will start on the improvement of the A487 trunk road between Furnace Bridge and Eglwys Fach in Cardiganshire; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The scheme is planned to start between April 1994 and March 1997.

Ceredigion Ports

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any plans to improve the ports in Ceredigion; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: No. Improvements to ports are matters for the port operators to take forward as they see fit.

Bilingual Schools

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many children attend bilingual schools in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The latest statistics available—1990—show that 104,616 children attend schools where some or all the teaching is through the medium of Welsh. This represents an increase of more than 1,000 pupils on the previous year.

Uniform Business Rate

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will introduce a scheme of relief against the uniform business rate in Wales for those whose businesses have had to close because of financial failure; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will make transitional relief against the uniform business rate available to new occupiers of existing shop and business premises in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I have no plans to do so.

Wind Farms

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will introduce planning guidelines to ensure that the effect upon local television and radio reception is taken into account by local planning authorities when considering applications for the construction of wind farms in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: A draft planning policy guidance note on renewable energy, including an annex on wind energy, was recently issued for public consultation. Paragraphs 52 to 56 of the annex give guidance on television and radio reception issues advising that "provided careful attention is paid to siting, wind turbines should not cause any significant problems of electromagnetic interference".

The consultation period expired on 12 February and the responses received are being assessed.

Heartbeat Wales

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to publish the evaluation study of the first five years of Heartbeat Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett [holding answer 24 February 1992]: The Heartbeat Wales programme is a multi-faceted project. Its evaluation is a complex process and is being undertaken in separate stages. The Health Promotion Authority for Wales—HPAW—published a technical report on "Recent Trends in Lifestyles in Wales 1985-1990" in February 1992 and compares 1985, 1988 and 1990 date on diet, smoking, alcohol, exercise weight and obesity by age and sex. The authority expects to publish two further technical reports in March 1992 examining changes in lifestyle by social class and sex, and by health authority district and sex.

By March 1993, the HPAW plans to publish a further four technical reports summarising community survey data and one technical report on clinical survey data. The final evaluation report is expected to be available by early summer 1993.

I am placing a copy of the February report in the Library of the House, and have arranged for copies of future reports to be placed similarly.

SCOTLAND

Inverclyde Enterprise Zone

16. Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent representations he has received concerning the Inverclyde enterprise zone; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Recent representations have related to the possible location within Inverclyde enterprise zone of the proposed expansion of the Registers of Scotland. It has now been decided to locate this operation at Cowglen, Glasgow.

I met the hon. Member and representatives of Inverclyde development corporation on 23 December to discuss prospects for the Inverclyde enterprise zone.

Bus Lanes

17. Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he plans to meet representatives of the Bus and Coach Council for Scotland to discuss its report, " Buses mean Business", on bus lanes in cities.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I hope to meet the Bus and Coach Council for Scotland on 9 March.

Defence

18. Mr. Douglas: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the action which he proposes to take in relation to the report by Scottish Enterprise on defence in Scotland.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The report now received by Scottish Enterprise is an important contribution to the development of the defence industries initiative. Information from that study will be used by Scottish Enterprise to take forward work already in hand with local enterprise companies and defence companies to identify practical steps to help companies and communities adapt to the changing demand for defence-related goods and services.

Fishing Industry

19. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next intends to meet fishing industry representatives in Scotland to discuss the future structure of the industry.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My noble Friend the Minister with responsibility for fisheries in Scotland will meet representatives of the fishing industry before the Fisheries Council meeting scheduled for 3 April.

21. Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate the cost of contract cancellation to the public purse arising from the cancellation of the commercial agreement entered into between his Department and the construction consortium for the purposes of building a toll-funded bridge to the Isle of Skye; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No cancellation costs arise, because the contract has not been cancelled.

Hospital Fund Raising

22. Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of the amount of money being raised by charities for Scottish hospitals.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Just under one half of 1 per cent. of health service funding is contributed from charitable sources. The NHS is very appreciative of the support which is provided in this way.

Scottish Power

23. Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he has had recently with the chairman of Scottish Power on the future of electricity generation and distribution.

Mr. Allan Stewart: My right hon. Friend meets the chairman of Scottish Power from time to time when a range of issues is discussed.

Drug Offences

24. Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people in Scotland, in each of the last five years, have been convicted, and what was their average sentence, for dealing, providing, pushing, selling, supplying or trafficking in drugs; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Information on convictions for drugs offences is published annually in "Statistics of the misuse of drugs: seizures and offenders dealt with, United Kingdom, Scotland tables", copies of which are in the Library.

Financial Services

25. Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of the number of people employed in the financial services sector in (a) Scotland and (b) Lothian region.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The latest figures available, showing the number of people employed in the financial services sector, come from the 1989 Employment Department census of employment. The figures are (a) 83,856 for Scotland and (b) 27,566 for Lothian region.

Council House Sales

26. Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many council houses have been sold to sitting tenants in Scotland since May 1979.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Between April 1979 and September 1991 nearly 234,000 public sector houses in Scotland were sold to sitting tenants. Included in that figure are nearly 173,000 sales by local authorities.

Nurse Training

27. Mr. Harry Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to meet health service unions in Scotland to discuss nurse training.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. Friend has no plans to meet health service unions in Scotland to discuss nurse training. Nurse training will, of course, change radically when we introduce Project 2000 courses later this year. My right hon. Friend also announced in February last year our plans for the future funding and organisation of nurse education and training following the enactment of the current legislative changes.

Renfrewshire Enterprise Company

28. Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he has had with the Renfrewshire enterprise company regarding training and industrial development.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I had a very useful and constructive meeting with the chairman of Renfrewshire Enterprise and his colleagues on 14 October last year at which a wide range of topics relating to training and industrial development were discussed. My right hon. Friend and I also have frequent discussions with the chairman and members of Scottish Enterprise about developments in the Scottish economy generally.

Unemployment

29. Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action he is taking to solve unemployment in Scotland.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The key to increased employment is a prosperous and productive economy. The Government are firmly committed to removing the barriers to economic growth and to the stimulation of economic development, through various measures including the activities of Scottish Enterprise, Highlands and Islands Enterprise and their networks of local enterprise companies.

In relation to unemployed individuals, this Government have introduced the most comprehensive range of measures there has ever been in this country to help people back to work. The Employment Service provides a wide range of services which result in two thirds of people who become unemployed leave unemployment within six months. The Employment Service also manages the employment action programme, delivered through local enterprise companies as a complement to the range of training schemes which they offer and which make a major contribution to helping young people and the long-term unemployed to improve their prospects of entering employment.

The effectiveness of these measures in Scotland can be seen from the fact that the number of those unemployed for over a year rose in Scotland by only 8·4 per cent. between January 1991 and January 1992, less than a fifth of the average for Great Britain as a whole.

Dumfries-Stranraer Rail Link

30. Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what application he has received for support for the reinstatement of direct rail links between Dumfries and Stranraer; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend has received representations seeking support, in principle, for the restoration of the railway line between Dumfries and Stranraer. Investment in railways is, however, a matter for British Rail. I understand that British Rail do not consider that this particular project could be economically or financially justified in the foreseeable future.

The Union

31. Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received in support of the maintenance of the Union between Scotland and England.

Mr. Lang: In the past six months I have received 47 letters supporting the maintenance of the Union between Scotland and England. That is more than I have received in favour of independence.

NHS Building

32. Sir Hector Monro: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many hospitals and other health board facilities have been built in Scotland since 1979; and at what cost.

Mr. Lang: Eighty-seven major hospital building projects have been completed since 1979 at a cost of £482 million. In addition to hospital new build and redevelopment, completed projects have included hospital service facilities, residences and energy saving schemes.

In the same period a large number of minor hospital projects and developments were completed. There has also been a major investment in information technology and a special programme to tackle backlog maintenance worth over £200; and significant new investment in health centres and colleges of nursing.

Capital investment in the NHS in Scotland has increased by 50 per cent. in real terms from 1979 to the year end 1991-92 and a total of nearly £230 million has been allocated to health boards in Scotland for capital expenditure for 1992-93.

A further 41 major projects with a value of £300 million are currently in the pipeline, representing the largest building programme in the history of the NHS in Scotland.

Fishing Industry

33. Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals he has for the restructuring of the fishing industry in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The future structure of the fishing industry in Scotland is linked to the need for the United Kingdom to develop a new multi-annual guidance programme for the fishing fleet for the period 1993-96. This is currently under discussion with the European Commission.

Constitutional Reform

34. Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received in favour of a devolved Scottish assembly.

Mr. Lang: In the past six months I have received 55 representations supporting a devolved Scottish assembly, and 35 against a devolved Scottish assembly.

35. Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next expects to meet the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities to discuss the future governance of Scotland.

Mr. Lang: I meet the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities, regularly, but it has not sought a meeting specifically to discuss the future governance of Scotland.

Departmental Officials

36. Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the cost to his Department of (a) arranging for officials to be in attendance at the Scottish Grand Committee in Edinburgh on 24 February and (b) arranging for officials to be in attendance for Scottish Question Time in Westminster today, 26 February.

Mr. Lang: As Scottish Office officials in attendance at Scottish Grand Committee meetings in Edinburgh are deployed from other duties, my Department does not bear any significant extra costs in respect of their attendance. Officials attending Scottish Question Time do so in pursuit of their duties and, therefore, as a rule, extra costs are not involved.

Manufacturing Output

37. Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland by how much manufacturing output in Scotland has risen since 1979.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Manufacturing output in Scotland has risen by 11·8 per cent. in the 11 years between 1979 and 1990.

Health Board Finances

38. Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met the chairmen of health boards to discuss financial allocations.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My last meeting with health board chairmen was on 31 January 1992.

National Health Service Trusts

39. Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has any plans to meet the chairmen of the Scottish National Health Service trusts to discuss operation of the trusts.

Mr. Lang: In my statement on 3 December approving the trust applications I indicated that I would be maintaining close contact with the trusts as they moved towards operational status on 1 April. I have already met the trust chairmen on several occasions and further meetings are planned.

Alternative Medicine

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the development of homoeopathic and alternative medicine within the Scottish health service.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The decision on whether to practise medicine using homoeopathic or other alternative treatments is for individual doctors. Doctors in contract with the National Health Service can provide these treatments for their patients in the same way as they provide conventional medicines.

Evening Primrose Oil

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether primrose oil for the treatment of arthritis is included in the list of items available on prescription under the national health service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Medicinal products which the Licensing Authority has on advice judged to be safe and efficacious are generally available on the NHS. One evening primrose oil product is licensed for the treatment of atopic eczema and is prescribable on the NHS for that purpose. No evening primrose oil product is licensed for the treatment of arthritis.

The Advisory Committee on Borderline Substances advises the Health Departments as to the circumstances in which unlicensed products may be regarded as drugs and has considered evening primrose oil products from time to time but has not been satisfied that they have a therapeutic use in the treatment of arthritis.

Patients Charter

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the cost of the contract with the Post Office to distribute each health board's local version of the patients charter.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The final cost of the contract with the Post Office will not be known until the distribution exercise is complete.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the cost for each health board of producing and distributing their local version of the patients charter.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Detailed information is not available centrally.

A7 (Accidents)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list all recorded road accidents which occurred on the A7 between Hawick and Langholm, indicating the location and date of each accident for the last two years for which figures are available.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 19 February 1992]: The information requested on injury accidents on the A7 between Hawick and Langholm for the two year period October 1989 to September 1991 is as follows:

Traffic Systems, Hawick

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement outlining the current timetable for consideration of the internal traffic management systems in Hawick; and when he now expects to be in a position to authorise the funds and capital consents required to enable work to start to alleviate the current congestion.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 19 February 1991]: I expect a report on proposals to provide improved traffic management in Hawick to be submitted to the Secretary of State by Borders regional council in the course of the next two to three months. Until this report is available it is not possible to estimate the level of funding which would be required.

Low-energy Lighting

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will make it his policy progressively to introduce low-energy lighting in all the buildings operated by his Department.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 25 February 1992]: The Scottish Office requires that any new buildings acquired should incorporate low-energy lighting systems. In existing buildings low-energy lighting is fitted wherever possible and this will continue as resources permit when refurbishment work is undertaken.

New Towns

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the proposed wind-up of the Scottish new towns.

Mr. Allan Stewart [pursuant to the reply, 29 January 1992, c. 623.] I made orders on 24 February for the wind-up of East Kilbride and Glenrothes development corporations. The orders, which will come into effect on 1 March 1992, provide for the wind-up of both corporations to be completed by 31 December 1995.

Housing Support Grants

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the amount of housing support grant given to each Scottish local authority in each years since 1980 on the basis of the amount of council stock; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Housing support grant is a deficit subsidy payable to those local housing authorities whose estimated housing revenue account expenditure would otherwise exceed their estimated housing revenue account income. The table shows the grant entitlements of individual authorities in each financial year from 1980-81 to 1992-93 divided by the number of houses to which the relevant housing revenue account in the appropriate year applied or is estimated to apply.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Pension Age

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he has conducted any survey of the proportion of men who would continue working after they reached pension age if it was lowered to 64, 63, 62, 61 and 60 years.

Miss Widdecombe: No; but the discussion document on equalising state pension age contained information on activity rates in this age group, and a survey commissioned by the Department from the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys will contain further information about individuals who have already retired, or plan to retire, earlier than the current state pension age. Since national insurance retirement pensions are no longer subject to an earnings rule, there is of course no necessary association between the decision whether or not to retire and the decision about whether or not to draw state retirement pension.

Poll Tax

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the cost in 1991-92 of allowing an earnings disregard of (a) £5 or (b) £10 to occupational pensions in the determination of their poll tax rebate.

Miss Widdecombe: Information for 1991-92 consistent with the departmental report could be provided only at disproportionate cost. In line with the overall expenditure forecasts in the departmental report (Cm 1914) the estimated costs at 1992-93 prices and benefit levels would be:

(a) £35 million
(b) £65 million

Source: Modelled using data drawn from the 1987-8-9 Family Expenditure Surveys.

Training Schemes

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security in what circumstances a single parent who is receiving income support can retain their eligibility for that benefit if they participate in European social fund vocational training courses provided either by (a) voluntary organisations or local authorities or (b) training and enterprise councils/local enterprise companies; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: The European social fund provides financial support to training and employment initiatives, including employment training. Lone parents will normally remain eligible for income support while participating in a training course which is funded under the European social fund. However, any payments made in connection with the course will be taken into account in the normal way, depending on whether these are made under section 2 of the Employment and Training Act 1973, or are otherwise made on a contractual or voluntary basis. In particular, any training premium, travelling expenses or living away from home allowance paid to employment training participants is disregarded. Those lone parents who are attending a non-government training course and whose youngest child is aged 16 or over will normally be required to be available for employment or to provide medical evidence that they are incapable of work.

Sickness and Invalidity Benefit

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what were the numbers of (a) men, (b) women and (c) in total claiming (i) sickness benefit and (ii) invalidity benefit each year since 1979; and what was the percentage change each year in each category.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is in the table:

Vocational Training

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) whether a person who has been paid a training allowance on a European social fund-funded vocational training course provided by a voluntary organisation or local authority, who was immediately prior to entry to the training scheme receiving a disability benefit can immediately requalify for that disability benefit when he or she finishes the course; and if he will make a statement;

(2) in what circumstances a person who is receiving either severe disability allowance, invalidity benefit or income support with a disability premium, may retain his or her eligibility for that benefit if he or she participates in European social fund vocational training courses provided either by (a) voluntary organisations or local authorities or (b) training and enterprise councils/local enterprise companies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The European social fund provides financial support to training and employment initiatives, including employment training.

A participant in employment training receives a training allowance which maintains the same level of payment as severe disablement allowance, invalidity benefit, or income support with a disability premium, in payment immediately before the start of the course, plus a £10 training premium.

A participant in a non-government course partly funded by the European social fund, who is in receipt of severe disablement allowance or invalidity benefit, must continue to satisfy the normal conditions of entitlement for those benefits. The principal condition is that the person must continue to be incapable of work.

A person receiving income support with a disability premium may retain eligibility for the premium, whatever the nature of the training, if he is blind or receiving attendance or mobility allowance or, from April, disability living allowance. In addition, a person who was entitled to a disability premium before he started employment training because he had invalidity benefit or severe disablement allowance, or had been incapable of work for 28 weeks or more, may continue to be entitled to the premium during that training even if they are no longer treated as incapable of work.

Where a person's invalidity benefit or severe disablement allowance has been withdrawn, due to attendance at a non-government funded course, he may requalify immediately where the break has been for eight weeks or less.

Entitlement to industrial injuries benefit, mobility allowance, attendance allowance (from April, disability living allowance) and the basic war disablement pension are unaffected whatever type of training a person undertakes.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security under what circumstances unemployed claimants who are receiving (a) unemployment benefit and (b) income support can participate in European social fund vocational training courses which lead to national vocational qualifications or credits towards them without losing their entitlement to their benefit payments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: Unemployment benefit (UB) claimants must continue to satisfy the normal conditions of entitlement in order to receive UB while engaged in training. This means that they must continue to seek work actively during the course and be prepared to terminate the course immediately a job vacancy becomes available.

Income support claimants undertaking non-governmental training courses must continue to satisfy the normal conditions of entitlement. The principal conditions are the availability for work and actively seeking work requirements, as for UB. Those participating in governmental training courses such as those provided under the employment training programme are exempt from the availability and actively seeking work conditions for income support purposes. The European social fund may contribute financial support to either governmental or non-governmental courses.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what new regulations and procedures were introduced to protect the benefits and training premium of unemployed income support claimants who participated in employment training; and which of these regulations apply to any benefits or training allowances received by an unemployed income support claimant who participates in a European social fund-funded vocational training course provided either by (a) voluntary organisations or local authorities, or by (b) training and enterprise councils/ local enterprise companies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: A participant in employment training (ET) receives a training allowance which maintains the same level of payment as the income support or unemployment benefit in payment immediately before the start of the course plus a £10 training premium. Income support participants continue to qualify for housing benefit and the range of other benefits to which income support is a passport. The training premium, any travelling—and usually living away from home—expenses reimbursed to the claimant, are also disregarded in the calculation of income for income support purposes. A participant in a non-governmental course who is in receipt of income support or unemployment benefit, must continue to satisfy the normal conditions of entitlement for benefits for unemployment. The principal conditions are that the participant must continue to seek work actively during the course and be prepared to terminate the course immediately a job vacancy becomes available to him.

The European social fund provides financial support to a wide range of training and employment initiatives, both governmental—including ET—and non-governmental. The benefit rules apply regardless of the type of organisation providing the course.

Family Credit

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how employed status youth training or employment training trainees should make a claim for family credit; what is the best information he has about the number of employed status trainees who are claiming family credit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: Employed status YT and ET trainees can make a claim for family credit on form FC1 in the same way as any other employed person. No information is available about the number of employed status trainees receiving family credit.

Departmental Staff

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the total number of employees in his Department; and how many are (a) black and (b) disabled.

Miss Widdecombe: The Department, including its agencies, asks staff to complete questionnaires on their ethnic origins on a voluntary basis. As at 1 April 1991, 3,331 of the 67,178 staff who have responded to the questionnaire were from ethnic minorities.

As at 1 June 1991, the Department, including its agencies, employed 84,152 staff of whom 1,465 were registered as disabled. There is no information on staff with disabilities who choose not to register.

Child Benefit

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the objectives of child benefit.

Mr. Jack: Child benefit is paid to all families with children in recognition of the fact that at all levels of income such families face greater expenditure than others. It is, and will remain, a strong element in our policies for family support. For less well-off families, this universal help is supplemented by extra help through the income-related benefits.

Training

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security to what class of national insurance credits people who are being paid a training allowance and are participating in a European social fund course run by a local authority or voluntary organisation are entitled; how they ensure that they are credited with them; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: An individual participating in a European social fund course will be entitled to Class 1 national insurance credits for each week of training, provided that he reached the age of 18 before the beginning of the tax year in which the course commenced, the course is full time and, at the outset, it was not expected to continue for more than 12 months.

People on training courses run by a local authority or voluntary organisation which satisfy the conditions for the award of credits should make an individual application for these credits. Form CF55C for this purpose may be obtained from the Department's local offices.

Sign Language

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many staff in Department of Social Security offices have sign language skills.

Mr. Scott: The provision of customer services in local offices is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency, and Miss Ann Chant, the chief executive of the Contributions Agency. They will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and copies of their letters will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Pensioners (Benefits)

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many pensioners were dependent on supplementary benefit in Scotland in 1979; and how many were dependent on income support on the latest date for which figures are available.

Miss Widdecombe: In November 1979 there were 160,000 supplementary benefit claim units in Scotland with a claimant or partner aged 60 or over. In May 1990, there were 168,000 income support claim units in Scotland with a claimant or partner aged 60 or over as recent improvements in income support have enabled more less well-off pensioners to become entitled.

Note: In 1990 there were 25,000 more people in Scotland aged 60 or over than in 1979.

Income Support

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the cost in 1992-93 of (a) restoring entitlement to income support for all 16 and 17-year-olds, at the current benefit rate for under 25-year-olds and (b) raising the income support personal allowance for people aged 18 to 24 years to the level of the personal allowance for those aged 25 years and over.

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 7 February 1992]: Information on the cost of restoring entitlement to income support to 16 and 17-year-olds is not available.

The estimated cost of increasing the rate for 18 to 24-year-olds to that paid to people aged 25 or over is £340 million.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Non-taxpayers

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many single people and married couples do not pay tax in 1991-92.

Mr. Maude: There are about 6·6 million single people not liable to income tax and about 4·1 million married couples where neither spouse is liable to tax.

Car Tax

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the cost to the revenue in (a) 1991-92 and (b) 1992-93, giving in each case the first and full year costs, of a one per cent. cut in car tax, in the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The requested estimates are as shown. They use the autumn statement forecast and are consistent with the methodology used in table 4·8 in chapter 4 of the 1991 autumn statement.

Revenue effect of 1 per cent. cut in car tax (£ million)

	1991-92	1992-93
First year	−125	−130
Full year	−140	−150

Child Care Tax Allowances

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the effect on Treasury revenues in 1992-93 and in a full year of extending the exemption of workplace nurseries from income tax as a benefit in kind to all forms of empioyer-provided or subsidised child care.

Mr. Maude: The annual cost would be approximately £5 million at current levels of provision and subsidies for child care. This estimate takes no account of behavioural effects, which could be substantial.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the revenue yield of putting the standard rate of VAT on funeral payments.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Standard rating those elements of funeral expenses which are presently exempt from value added tax would raise an estimated £40 million in 1991-92.

Income Tax and NI Liability

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the latest estimates of how many people with gross incomes of over £100,000 pay (a) a national insurance contributions bill and (b) a total income tax and national insurance contributions bill, of less than (i) 35 per cent., (ii) 30 per cent., (iii) 25 per cent., (iv) 20 per cent., (v) 15 per cent., (vi) 10 per cent. and (vii) 5 per cent. of their gross incomes, in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Maude: Available figures relate to the estimated 150,000 taxpayers in 1991-92 with gross incomes of £80,000 and above. Nearly all of these taxpayers pay less than 5 per cent. of their gross income in national insurance contributions. Estimates of combined income tax and national insurance contribution liabilities are that 60,000 have an effective rate above 35 per cent., 80,000 have an effective rate between 30 and 35 per cent. and the remaining 10,000 have an effective rate between 25 and 30 per cent.

Data Information Systems

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 12 February, Official Report, columns 521-22, whether there is any proposal to undertake manual data exchange between tax authorities in other European countries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: In accordance with the Council directive of 19 December 1977 (77/799/EEC), competent authorities of the member states may exchange certain information to enable them to assess taxpayers correctly. These exchanges are subject to certain safeguards to preserve the confidentiality of the information and were given legislative effect in section 77 of the Finance Act 1978.

The directive was extended to VAT on 6 December 1979 (79/1070/EEC) and all exchanges are subject to the confidentiality safeguards of directive 77/799/EEC. Directive 79/1070/EEC was implemented by section 17(2) of the Finance Act 1980. There is currently a proposal to extend directive 77/799/EEC to include excise duties on manufactured tobacco, alcohol and alcoholic beverages and mineral oils.

Taxation

Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give figures for each standard region of England, and for Scotland and Wales, for a one-earner family with two children on (a) average male earnings for that region, stating what this is and (b) median male earnings for that region, stating what this is in both April 1979 and April 1990 and counting child benefit as negative taxation, for (i) the amount paid in income tax per week, (ii) the amount paid in national insurance contributions, (iii) the amount paid in VAT, (iv) the amount paid in indirect taxation, excise duties and so on (v) the amount paid in domestic rates or in community charge as appropriate and (vi) the total amount paid out in the listed categories above, giving in each case the figures in current prices, constant prices and as a percentage of gross earnings.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 11 February 1992]: Figures for average male earnings in April 1979 and April 1990 and for median male earnings in April 1990 are shown in the table, along with the income tax and employee national insurance contributions payable on them under the 1979-80 and 1990-91 tax and NIC regimes respectively. Figures for regional median male earnings for 1979 are unavailable and could be derived only at disproportionate cost. Reliable estimates of the amounts payable in VAT, other indirect taxes, domestic rates and the community charge which reflect regional variations in spending patterns and local tax rates cannot be made as the sample size of the family expenditure survey, on which such estimates would be based, is too small.

Notes to table:

(1) Income tax payments are calculated on the assumption that the households receive no tax reliefs other than the standard allowances and only have income from employment. All earners are assumed to pay Class 1 NI contributions at the contracted-in rate.

(2) Child benefit is treated as a negative income tax.

(3) Average and median earnings estimates are derived from the New Earnings Survey. To provide consistent estimates for the two years, average earnings figures for April 1979 have been multiplied by a splicing factor, taking account of a classification change in the 1983 New Earnings Survey, from 'males aged over 21 years' to 'all males on adult rates'. The regional average earnings shown for 1979 therefore differ from those in the published New Earnings Survey.

Student Taxpayers

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what, in the latest year for which information is available, is the number of students who pay income tax; and what is the total number of students who pay VAT.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 24 February 1992]: Information on the number of students who pay income tax is not available centrally and could be collected only at disproportionate cost.

VAT is chargeable on a wide range of consumer expenditure and it is likely that everybody has to pay some in the course of a year.

Tobacco Taxation

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing the amount of tax paid on the 10 most popular brands of cigarettes in each EC member state and the average price of a pack of 20 cigarettes in each country.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 26 February 1992]: Information is available relating only to 1991 and for the most popular cigarette brand in each EC member states as follows:

Taxes and Duties

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what amounts to taxes and duty were raised in each of the last five years (a) at 1991 prices and (b) as a percentage of total revenues on tobacco and tobacco products;

(2) what amounts of taxes and duties were raised in each of the last five years (a) at 1991 prices and (b) as a percentage of total revenues on alcohol and alcohol products.

TRANSPORT

Redmire to Redcar Rail Link

Mr. Snape: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to intervene in the possible closure of the Redmire to Redcar rail link following the withdrawal of the British Steel limestone traffic; and what assessment he has made of the extent to which such a closure would be in accordance with his policy of transferring freight from road to rail.

Mr. Freeman: Following discussions with my Department, British Rail and my hon. Friend the Member for Richmond, Yorks (Mr. Hague) British Steel has agreed to continue transporting limestone on the Redmire line until the end of September, rather than the end of March as they had previously proposed. British Rail, for its part, has agreed to defer its proposed increase in rail charges for the same period. My officials are to host further discussions with my hon. Friend together with representatives of British Steel, British Rail and North Yorkshire county council, to explore the scope for keeping the limestone traffic on the line in the longer term. We have indicated our willingness to consider assistance through the freight facilities grants scheme, if appropriate.

Railway Clearing House

Mr. Snape: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether his Department has any plans to lease the former railway clearing house building at Eversholt street, London NW1, following the privatisation of railway services.

Mr. McLoughlin: No. I understand from the British Rail property board that the former railway clearing house was vested in the assets of Sealink, which was sold by the British Railways Board in 1984.

Ports Act 1991

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to review the operations of part III of the Ports Act 1991 in so far as its effects upon lighthouse dues and the smaller ports are concerned; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: I am currently considering proposals made by Trinity House and the Northern Lighthouse board under part III of the Ports Act 1991. In reaching a decision I shall take account of the representations made by the various interested parties.

Motorcycle Leg Protection

Sir John Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will withdraw his proposals for the use of motorcycle leg protection.

Mr. Chope: It is the Government's desire to encourage the development of safe motorcycle secondary protection devices so that they can be available on an optional basis to those motorcyclists who wish to make use of them.

There remains considerable scepticism among manufacturers as to whether it is possible to design and produce motorcycle leg protectors which enhance total safety and do not increase the risk of head injuries. Research is therefore continuing with a view to allaying such concerns.

Roads and Traffic, Shropshire

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what were the capital and revenue contributions from central Government to road and traffic schemes in Shropshire for 1978-79, 1982-83, 1986-87 and 1991-92.

Mr. Chope: The capital allocations were as follows:

	1978-79	1982-83	1986-87	1991-92
		£ million
Borrowing/credit approvals or equivalent	N/A	2,927	2,434	5,621
Transport supplementary grant	N/A	[1]	1,456	4,355
Total	—	—	3,890	9,976

[1] Before 1985-86 transport supplementary grant was paid on both capital and revenue expenditure but was not differentiated between the two elements.

Grants to local authorities for revenue expenditure have since 1982 been unhypothecated—that is, not split into allocations for separate services. Only the ceiling for expenditure by central Government is controlled. Shropshire county council is free to make as much or as little revenue expenditure as it considers appropriate on road and traffic schemes.

Euro-routes

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the designation of Euro-routes between Northern Ireland and Great Britain.

Mr. Chope: Euro-routes are designated in annex I of the European agreement on main international traffic arteries (AGR). This is a free-standing agreement managed by the Economic Commission for Europe of the United Nations in Geneva.

The E routes designated between Ireland and Britain are:

the E16 which runs Londonderry-Belfast-Glasgow-Edinburgh;

the E18 which runs Craigavon-Belfast-Larne-Stranraer-Gretna-Carlisle-Newcastle and then through Norway, Sweden and Finland to St. Petersburg; the E20 which runs Shannon-Dublin-Liverpool-Manchester-Bradford-Leeds-Hull and then through Denmark, Sweden and Estonia to St. Petersburg; the E30 which runs Cork-Rosslare-Fishguard-Cardiff-London-Felixstowe and then through the Netherlands, Germany, Poland and Byelorussia to Moscow.

Road Schemes

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he plans to announce the detailed guidelines for the use of discretionary powers to acquire property affected by his Department's road schemes which were referred to in his answer to the right hon. Member for Tonbridge and Malling (Sir J. Stanley) of 21 November, 1991 Official Report, column 237.

Mr. Chope: I announced the detailed guidelines for the use of the new discretionary powers of section 62 of the Planning and Compensation Act 1991 on 17 January, pursuant to my answer to my right hon. Friend the Member for Tonbridge and Malling (Sir J. Stanley).

Sir Peter Blaker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list in the Official Report for each highway authority (a) the value of the first year return, (b) the total net present value and (c) the length of each road project which qualified for transport supplementary grant in each year from 1989-90 to 1991-92; and if he will give the same information for each road project which has been accepted for transport supplementary grant in 1992-93 and for the proposed Squires Gate link road, phase 2, in Lancashire.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 24 February 1992]: Listed are the details requested for major schemes newly accepted for transport supplementary grant in the years 1989-90 to 1992-93. The tables also include similar information on the Squires Gate link road phase II.

Helicopters, Central London

Ms. Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the terms of reference of the study he has initiated on helicopter provision for central London; and if he will include in them an assessment of the need and of the demand for helicopter provision in central London.

Mr. McLoughlin: The group undertaking the study will make a comparative evaluation of possible sites for a heliport to serve central London, and submit a report to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State. The study will include an assessment of the need and the demand for helicopter services in central London. It will also consider safety and other operational factors, air traffic control constraints, noise and other environmental issues, and surface access. My right hon. Friend intends to publish the group's report, which he hopes to receive within 12 months.

ENVIRONMENT

Buildings in Scotland

Sir Nicholas Fairbairn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what funds his Department has spent on buildings in Scotland in each of the past five years; and if he will list the amount spent on each project.

Mr. Yeo: The figures are as follows:

	£ million
1986-87	133·501
1987-88	115·389
1988-89	110·701
1989-90	130·856
1990-91	12·323

The figures for the years 1986-87 to 1989-90 represent expenditure by PSA Scotland. Since 1 April 1988 clients have progressively untied from PSA services and become responsible for reporting expenditure against their own votes. Therefore:

(1) expenditure from 1 April 1988 excludes major schemes for Civil clients.

(2) expenditure in 1990-91 represents that by the Property Holdings directorate of DoE on civil accommodation in Scotland, but excludes expenditure by other civil departments and MOD.

Major construction schemes controlled by PSA headquarters are excluded as expenditure records are not maintained on a location basis. The figures also exclude rental costs.

It is not possible to provide details of the amounts spent on each project.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing the number of (a) men and (b) women in his Department in each of grades (i) 1, (ii) 2, (iii) 3, (iv) 4, (v) 5, (vi) 6, (vii) 7, (viii) SEO, (ix) HEO, (x) administrative trainee, (xi) EO, (xii) CO and (xiii) CA.

	Female	Male
Grade 1	0	1
Grade 2	2	6
Grade 3	5	31

The Department employs 73 staff who are registered disabled and a further 58 who are known to have a disability but are not registered.

RECHAR

Mr. Stott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if the granting of RECHAR to local authorities will carry with it supplementary credit approval.

Mr. Yeo: I refer the hon. Member to the statement made by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on 17 February 1992, Official Report, column 22, in respect of the ERDF-aided RECHAR programme.

Energy Saver Scheme

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will consider introducing grants for local authorities as part of an energy saver scheme.

Mr. Baldry: The Government are promoting energy efficiency-related schemes in local authority housing through the green house demonstration programme, the home energy efficiency scheme and through estate action schemes which can include improvements to the heating and insulation of local authority housing.

Mr. Yeo: Available estimates from household surveys are as follows:

Notes
Estimates are derived from sample surveys and therefore subject to the usual sampling errors.
England—proportions from the general household survey applied to the Department of the Environment's household estimates.
London—regional and sub-regional estimates require a larger sample which is only available for the years shown—from the labour force survey housing trailers. Figures for inner and outer London may not sum to the totals for Greater London because of rounding.

Information on the number of households by tenure for individual local authorities is available only from the census of population. Until 1991 census results are available, in early summer 1992, the most recent information is from the 1981 census. Copies of 1981 census reports are in the Library.

Air Pollution

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many representations have been received by his Department to date concerning the report,

"Air Pollution and Tree Health in the UK;" and if he will make a statement on the progress made in the light of its recommendations.

Mr. Baldry: None. The report is due for publication in the spring.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to review the targets for his Department's plan for reducing sulphur dioxide and nitrogen oxide emissions from existing large combustion plants.

Mr. Baldry: I have no immediate plans to review the emission limits set out in the national plan.

New Homes

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the estimated average first year cost of constructing a new home (a) nationally and (b) in each standard economic region; and if he will provide this information according to the available data on different sites of home.

Sir George Young: The majority of new housebuilding is undertaken by private builders and consequently the information requested is not available to the Department.

Bed-and-breakfast Accommodation

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the average annual cost of keeping a family in bed-and-breakfast accommodation.

Sir George Young: Annual costs can be derived from the information published by the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy in "Homelessness Statistics: 1989-90 Actuals", a copy of which is in the Library.

[1] In 1978-79, rate support grant was made up of needs, resources and domestic elements. The needs element was paid to county councils and resources and domestic elements were paid to district councils.

[2] In 1981-82, following the introduction of a different rate support grant system, needs and resources elements were replaced by block grant payable to both upper and lower tier authorities.

[3] In 1990-91 the community charge system was introduced. The figures include all grants into the collection fund administered by Shrewsbury and Atcham borough council, which supports the chargepayer in respect of spending by all tiers of authorities. The Government also pay specific grants into the general funds administered by both the named authorities. The figures given are estimates of those inside aggregate Exchequer finance (AEF). As the two authorities do not cover the same functions, the specific grants are quite different both in size and consumption.

Leeds Development Council

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 24 February, if he will set out, for each year since the establishment of the Leeds development corporation, the figures provided by the economic consultants; and if he will place in the Library a copy of each report prepared by the economic consultants.

Mr. Key: The net gain in employment figures provided by the economic consultants for each year since the establishment of Leeds development corporation is as follows:

	Number
1988-89	2,007
1989-90	3,234
1990-91	621

The reports prepared by the consultants contain information which is commercial-in-confidence. If the hon. Member wishes to discuss the details further he should contact the chairman of the development corporation direct.

Thorn and Hatfield Moors

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many representations he has received concerning the future of Thorne and Hatfield moors; and how many of these were in favour of the agreement between English Nature and Fisons plc.

Mr. Heseltine: Since the details of the agreement between English Nature and Fisons were made public I have received only a few letters which express some reservations or seek further clarification of its contents. As knowledge of the agreement becomes more general I am sure that the public will recognise that the agreement is a significant step forward in the safeguarding of peatlands.

Peat

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will place in the Library copies of the research commissioned by English Nature from the Institute of Hydrology and Dundee university into the hydrology of peat bogs;

(2) if he will publish any assessment made by English Nature of the effects of continual commercial peat cutting on Thorne and Hatfield moors adjacent to those areas now identified for conservation purposes and any hydrological or other research on which such assessment has been based.

Mr. Heseltine: The research commissioned by English Nature from the Institute of Hydrology and the University of Dundee concerning the hydrology of part of Thorne moors has just been published. A copy will be placed in the Library.

In addition a study carried out by the University of Sheffield identified a need to retain water on the national nature reserve on Thorne moors and to block the drains running from the surrounding land. This will be done under the terms of the agreement reached between English Nature and Fisons.

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if English Nature intends to remove site of special scientific interest status from any area of peat bog from which peat is commercially extracted.

Mr. Heseltine: No.

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in the Library a copy of the agreement between Fisons plc and English Nature concerning peat extraction.

Mr. Heseltine: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Taunton (Mr. Nicholson) on 12 February 1992, Official Report, column 506. In addition I have arranged for a copy of the information package made available to the public by English Nature at the time of the announcement of the agreement to be placed in the Library.

Nature Conservation

Mr. Jessel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the draft planning policy guidance note on nature conservation will be published.

Sir George Young: The Department of the Environment and the Welsh Office have today published a draft planning policy guidance note on nature conservation for public consultation and copies are being placed in the Library. The planning policy guidance provides up-to-date guidance on how the Government's policies on the conservation of our natural heritage are to be reflected in land use planning. It also sets out the main statutory obligations under both domestic and international law. We want to ensure effective conservation of wildlife and natural features while making adequate provision for development and economic growth. This planning policy guidance is designed to achieve that.

Wild Birds

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures he proposes to take to protect wild birds in trade.

Mr. Baldry: With colleagues in the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, we are acting on a number of fronts to protect birds and other wild animals in trade.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State, wrote last week to the European Commission to urge it to make speedy progress in drawing up the special safeguards for the transport of birds, negotiated last autumn by my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, as part of a directive on the welfare of all animals in transport. To achieve immediate improvements in the conditions in which birds are transported. I am also writing, with my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary for Agriculture, to the International Air Traffic Association (IATA) to seek worldwide limits on the size of shipments. Should this approach fail, MAFF will introduce stricter limits nationally.

The Department has a particular responsibility for those birds and other animals whose import we licence. In preparation for next month's conference of the parties to the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species (CITES) I have identified with interested organisations, the introduction of checklists to monitor and enforce transport conditions as a top priority. The United Kingdom will complete these forthwith for imports of all animals subject to CITES controls. Checklists may be used as a basis for enforcement action; the application of stricter transport conditions; and for imposing restrictions on trade in particular species between particular countries. At the CITES conference, we shall urge others to follow our example on both the checklist and the collection of mortality statistics.

We shall also press for a substantial improvement in the implementation of CITES controls worldwide. In particular, as identified by our scientific advisers last year, action must be taken to remedy the failure of many countries to meet the Convention's requirements for the issue of export permits.

Our national licensing controls are already much more extensive than the basic CITES restrictions and we shall investigate further extension in the light of the latest mortality statistics. We shall also continue to encourage our partners in the European Community to join us in imposing tighter controls. I welcome the recent publication by the European Commission of proposals for a regulation which would meet many of the wide-ranging concerns I expressed to them last year. We shall examine the full implications of the proposals urgently starting with those relating to the care and housing of live animals. Where appropriate, we shall not hesitate to take action before the regulation comes into effect.

Hedgerows

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to introduce grants for hedgerow maintenance.

Mr. Heseltine [pursuant to his reply, 20 November 1991, c. 159]: As part of our initiative "Action for the Countryside" which, together with my right hon. Friend the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, I launched today, we are introducing a new hedgerow incentive scheme to counter the problem of loss of hedgerows through lack of maintenance. The scheme will encourage farmers and landowners to manage hedgerows in ways that will ensure their long-term survival. The hedgerow incentive scheme will target hedgerows of particular historic, landscape or wildlife importance. Hedgerows are also being lost through removal and we have announced our intention to legislate when parliamentary time permits to introduce a hedgerow notification scheme.

In addition to our proposed new hedgerow incentive scheme, "Action for the Countryside" reviews other countryside policies, looks at the changes under way and sets out new initiatives for the future.

The new initiatives concentrate on action to maintain a prosperous economy and thriving communities in the countryside, to protect and enhance the landscape, to provide for public enjoyment of the countryside and to protect and conserve wildlife. They are not put forward in isolation. The initiatives described here carry forward the principles of "This Common Inheritance" (Cmd 1200) and are complementary to policies already in hand. They demonstrate the importance that the Government attach to integrating development to sustain rural communities with the conservation of the countryside.

The Government remain committed to keeping its policies in the countryside under review and will take further action when and where necessary to secure the delivery of its objectives.

I am arranging for copies of "Action for the Countryside" to be placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Education Expenditure

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing for each local education authority the percentage increase in standard spending assessment for education comparing 1992-93 with 1991-92; how much of this variation was accounted for by variation in pupil numbers; how much was to meet the full year effects of the 1991 teachers pay award; and how much was for the anticipated effect of the 1992 pay award.

Mr. Key: The table shows for each authority the total percentage increase in the education standard spending assessment between 1991-92 and 1992-93 and the percentage increase accounted for by the changes in pupil numbers.

The overall cost of teachers' pay awards is among the pressures which the Government have taken into account in determining the appropriate amount for authorities to spend collectively on education in 1992-93. The cost of the pay awards is not, however, one of the indicators used to calculate education standard spending assessments and it is not therefore possible to identify a separate allowance for this cost within individual authorities' standard spending assessments.

Education authorities are to receive additional grant of £56·6 million in 1992-93 to fund the additional cost of the teachers' pay award. This will be distributed in line with the schools' elements of the education standard spending assessment.

Council Tenants Charter

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the cost of preparation, publication and distribution of the council tenants charter.

Sir George Young: The estimated cost of the production, launch and distribution of 1 million copies of the full tenants charter and 5 million copies of the explanatory leaflet is £298,600, subject to final invoices. This includes the cost of translating the booklet into five languages and producing an audio-taped version for blind tenants. Further distribution costs will be incurred in response to demand.

North Yorkshire County Council

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what the total level of Government support to North Yorkshire county council was in 1990-91, and in 1991-92; and what is the projected figure for 1992-93.

Mr. Key [holding answer 26 February 1992]: The bulk of North Yorkshire's revenue finance is derived from precepts on collection funds administered by the district councils within the county. The council, however, receives certain specific grants from the Government which are paid directly into its own general fund. Those inside aggregate external finance were estimated to be £33·409 million in 1990-91 and £36·823 million in 1991-92. Estimates for specific grants for 1992-93 are not available as the relevant returns have not yet been received by the Department. In 1992-93, North Yorkshire will also receive an additional grant towards the teachers' pay award of £0·746 million.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Crime Statistics

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give the number of crimes (a) recorded and (b) detected by the West Yorkshire police for each year from 1976 to 1991 shown (i) in total and (ii) by each police station.

Mr. John Patten: The available information is given in the table. Figures for 1991 are not available. The chief constable's annual report for West Yorkshire gives crimes recorded and detected by sub-division only.

Notifiable offences recorded by the police in West Yorkshire 1976-90[1]

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will indicate the number of (a) sexual offences and (b) sexual assaults against men in each year of the last five years for (i) London and (ii) nationally.

Mr. John Patten: Information on sexual offences recorded by the police for 1986 to 1989 is published in table 2.9 of "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales 1989" and figures for 1990 are published in table 3 of Home Office "Statistical Bulletin 13/91." The equivalent figures for London are published in Table 13.2 of the "Report of the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis 1990". Copies of all these publications are available in the Library.

Mr. Caborn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give the number of crimes (a) recorded and (b) detected by the North Yorkshire police between October 1976 and September 1977 and in the same October to September period each year since then up to October 1990 to September 1991.

Mr. John Patten The available information is contained in the table. Clear up statistics are published only for calendar years.

Police, North Yorkshire

Mr. Caborn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give the number of additional uniformed police officers, excluding special constables, that have been authorised to be added to the strength of the North Yorkshire police in each year from 1975 to 1991.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: It is not possible to distinguish between increases in uniformed and non-uniformed police officers as such information is not held centrally. The establishment of the North Yorkshire police has been increased by the following amounts between 1975 and 1990:

Year	Police posts
1975	111
1979	40
1989	15
1990	25
1991	6

The police authority did not request establishment increases in the years 1980-81 to 1987-88 inclusive.

Fingerprint Technology

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made since the publication of Cm 1163 in applying automatic fingerprint recognition technology to the work of the National Identification Bureau.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: It remains an objective of the Government to apply automatic fingerprint recognition —AFR—technology to the work of the National Identification Bureau. To this end, the Home Office has been collaborating with the Federal Bureau of Investigation in the United States of America since autumn 1990 on studying how best to apply this technology to very large collections of fingerprints. Specialist staff are being recruited to the Home Office to manage a programme of work aimed at developing a national automatic fingerprint identification system to support both the identification of arrestees work undertaken presently by the NIB and the matching of fingerprint marks left at scenes of crime.

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether all computerised systems used by police forces in England and Wales to handle fingerprints are (a) mutually compatible, (b) compatible with the system used in Scotland and (c) compatible with other systems in use or being developed by TREVI countries.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The automatic fingerprint recognition —AFR—systems supplied by any particular AFR manufacturer are based on proprietary standards which do not allow these systems to communicate directly with systems supplied by any other manufacturer. As police forces in England and Wales have purchased, or plan to purchase, AFR systems from different manufacturers, these systems will not be compatible. Nor will they all be compatible with the system in Scotland. Similarly, there are a number of different systems in use or being planned in TREVI countries.

The Home Office, the FBI and others, including the suppliers of AFR systems, have been co-operating with the National Institute of Standards and Technology (NIST) in the USA to develop non-proprietary standards for image storage and for the interchange of fingerprint information between different AFR systems. Insofar as police forces in England and Wales purchase systems which meet these non-proprietary standards, these systems will be compatible. This matter is currently being discussed with the Association of Chief Police Officers. The issue of compatibility between AFR systems in use in Europe is being considered by TREVI.

Electoral Roll (Prisoners)

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will review the rules relating to the time at which a prisoner released after 31 October can register on the electoral roll.

Mrs. Rumbold: No. Convicted prisoners who are detained on the qualifying date of 10 October cannot be regarded as resident for electoral registration purposes at either their place of detention or their home address. There is no provision for adding to the register the names of people who became resident after the qualifying date. Released prisoners are in the same position as anyone else who becomes resident after the qualifying date.

Police, West Mercia

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what were the capital and revenue contributions from central Government to the West Mercia police authority for 1978-79, 1982-83, 1986-87 and 1991-92.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information on the amounts of police specific grant paid by the Home Office to the West Mercia police authority in respect of its expenditure in 1978-79, 1982-83 and 1986-87, and expected to be paid in respect of 1991-92, is as follows. That part of the authority's expenditure which is not met by specific grant is apportioned between its constituent county councils, and their contributions to the authority's expenditure are supported by central Government through the revenue support grant system.

Specific grant paid to West Mercia Police Authority

	£ millions
1978-79[1] [2]	8·2
1982-83[1] [2]	17·8
1986-87[1] [3]	24·1
1991-92[3] [4]	42·7

[1] Grant paid on revenue expenditure, loan charges and revenue contributions to capital expenditure.
[2] Rate of grant 50 per cent.
[3] Rate of grant 51 per cent.
[4] Grant paid on revenue expenditure, loan charges on pre-April 1990 debt, and capital expenditure.

Prison Suicides

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many prisoners are recorded as having attempted suicide in 1990 and 1991;

(2) how many prisoners committed acts of self-injury in 1990 and in 1991 which resulted in medical treatment;

(3) how many 15-year-old boys and girls in prison attempted suicide in 1990 and 1991.

Mrs. Rumbold [holding answer 10 February 1992]: In 1991 there was a recorded total of 2,846 acts of deliberate self-harm by prisoners in Her Majesty's Prison Service establishments. (Some prisoners committed acts of deliberate self-harm on more than one occasion.) Of the total, 11 were committed by 15-year-old prisoners.

All reported acts of deliberate self-harm result in medical treatment. There may be some cases, however, in which the prisoners harmed themselves in a minor way but did not bring this to the attention of staff, and so the injury would not have been reported.

It is not possible to distinguish reliably how many acts of deliberate self-harm were suicidal in intent.

The information requested for 1990 could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Middle East

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the middle east peace process; and if he will list the forthcoming bilateral and multilateral meetings.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: A fourth round of bilateral negotiations started in Washington on 24 February. The first substantive meetings of the five multilateral working groups set up at the co-ordinating meeting in Moscow at the end of January are due to take place at the end of April and the beginning of May. They will cover economic development, water issues, the environment, refugees and arms control. We continue, with our European partners, to give full support to the process. Progress is bound to be slow but some momentum has now been achieved.

NATO Secretary-General

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions were held with the Secretary-General of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation in advance of his recent visit to Ukraine and Russia.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The alliance's relations with the republics of the former Soviet Union have been regularly discussed at NATO, and the Secretary-General told allies of his plans to visit the Ukraine and Russia well in advance.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Morocco

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the Government's position on the recent decision of the European Parliament to suspend EC aid to Morocco.

Mrs. Chalker: The European Parliament vote on 15 January denied the necessary assent to the proposed EC/Morocco fourth financial protocol. Her Majesty's Government support the protocol as an important element in strengthening EC relations with Morocco. We believe that concern over human rights is best expressed separately and does not justify withholding assent to this protocol which we believe should be implemented.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Jury Trials

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Attorney-General for each of the last three years for which figures are available, how many people elected for trial by jury; how many of those who elected for trial by jury were subsequently convicted; and how many of those who were convicted had a previous conviction, for an offence involving violence or dishonesty, whether or not such convictions were spent within the meaning of the Rehabilitation of Offenders Act 1974.

Mr. John Patten: I have been asked to reply.
I will write to the hon. Member.

ENERGY

Offshore Oil and Gas

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will publish a table showing the regional breakdown of British oil and gas production, defined by the regional location of the terminals at which offshore oil and gas was landed, and the wellhead site in the case of onshore oil and gas.

Mr. Moynihan: The information in tabular form, on a provisional basis, for 1991 is as follows:

2. Full-time staff count as 1 and part-time staff 0·5.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the total number of employees in his Department; and how many are (a) black and (b) disabled.

Mr. Wakeham: As at 1 April 1991 the Department employed 969 staff of whom 808 (83 per cent.) had responded to the surveys; of the respondents 85 (10·4 per cent.) have identified themselves as from the ethnic minorities. As at 1 June 1991 there were 13 registered disabled staff in the Department. These figures are on a headcount basis, that is, full and part-time staff count as one.

Energy Efficiency

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will extend the energy management and assessment scheme to include grants for equipment installed as part of an energy efficiency drive.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: No. The energy management assistance scheme is designed to help with the cost of consultancy and project management costs. Any capital investment identified as necessary within the scheme will be recovered in a short period from greater efficiency and savings.

PRIME MINISTER

Market Research

Mr. Gould: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the companies recently commissioned by his office, the Cabinet Office and the citizens charter unit to carry out polling and market research; and if he will list the areas of research, the questionnaires to be used and the groups to be questioned.

The Prime Minister: No such research has been commissioned recently by my office, the Cabinet Office or the citizens charter unit.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Company Directors

Mr. Bell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) how many applications have been made by him or his predecessors to the courts for the disqualification of directors under the terms and provisions of the Company Directors Disqualification Act 1986; how many have been successful; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many referrals there were to the disqualification unit of the Department of Trade and Industry for applications to be made for the disqualification of directors under the Company Directors Disqualification Act 1986 for the years 1987, 1988, 1989, 1990 and 1991; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will set out the criteria under which applications are made to the court for the disqualification of directors under the Company Directors Disqualification Act 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: The criteria under which applications are made for the disqualification of directors under section 6 of the Company Directors Disqualification Act 1986 on the ground of unfitness are set out in schedule I to that Act. They include breach of duty, misapplication of funds, contraventions of the Companies Acts and the Insolvency Act and the extent of a director's responsibility for the causes of the company becoming insolvent. The courts must have regard to these matters in determining whether a person's conduct as a director of a particular company or companies makes him unfit to be concerned in the management of companies generally.

The following numbers of unfit conduct reports have been made by official receivers and insolvency practitioners:

	Numbers
1987	3,115
1988	4,231
1989	3,234
1990	4,235
1991	5,747
	20,562

In the period from 28 April 1986 to 31 December 1991, 2,184 disqualification applications have been made under section 6 of the Act; 1,193 orders have been made and 190 applications have been dismissed or withdrawn.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what support has been, and is being provided to Northern Ireland industrialists by way of the Export Credits Guarantee Department.

Mr. Sainsbury: The full range of ECGD facilities continues to be available to companies carrying on business in Northern Ireland.

Beer Orders

Mr. Crowther: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent meetings he has had with representatives of brewery companies on matters related to the implementation of the beer orders; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: I met the chairman of Grand Metropolitan plc, on 30 January 1992. My officials have also had recent meetings with a number of brewers about the implementation of the beer orders.

Barlow Clowes (Government Shareholdings)

Sir Robin Maxwell-Hyslop: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when and in what manner Her Majesty's Government intend to dispose of the shareholdings which they acquired following the transfer of assets from the collapsed Barlow Clowes holdings.

Mr. Lilley: The assets of the former Barlow Clowes entities are being administered by the appointed office holders.

WALES

Equal Opportunities

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the total number of employees in his Department; and how many are (a) black and (b) disabled.

Mr. David Hunt: As at 1 January 1992 my Department employed 2,411 whole-time equivalent staff; 32 respondents to the ethnic origin survey have described themselves as being of ethnic minority; 41 members of staff have chosen to register as disabled.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a table showing the number of (a) men and (b) women in his Department in each of grades (i) 1, (ii) 2, (iii) 3, (iv) 4, (v) 5, (vi) 6, (vii) 7, (viii) SEO, (ix) HEO, (x) administrative trainee, (xi) EO, (xii) CO and (xiii) CA.

Second Home Owners

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish figures showing the amount of poll tax received by each local authority in Wales which derived from second home owners within the local authority area in both 1990 and 1991; and what are the estimated levels of council tax to be collected from second home owners in each local authority area in Wales for the first year of its operation.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Information on local authority standard charge income derived from second homes in Wales is not held centrally. Council tax income from second home owners in Wales will depend on the number of discretionary discounts awarded by local authorities, the valuation of the properties concerned, and the tax set by each local authority for 1993-94.

Ministerial Record

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list (a) his departmental failures and (b) his departmental achievements over the past year.

Mr. David Hunt: I shall be making a statement on the performance of my Department in the Welsh day debate on Thursday 27 February.

Roads

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he intends updating the information given in the 1991 supplement to "Roads in Wales: Progress and Plans for the 1990s."

Sir Wyn Roberts: I have today published the 1992 supplement to "Roads in Wales: Progress and Plans for the 1990s". Copies have been placed in the Library of the House.

EMPLOYMENT

Training

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the number of (a) men and (b) women taking Government employment training courses and registered as living in the London borough of Wandsworth as of 18 February.

Mr. Jackson: In the period 1 April 1991 to 5 January 1992 it is provisionally estimated that here were 20,500 employment training (ET) entrants in the London region. Of these about 56 per cent. were men and 44 per cent. were women.

Absolute numbers are not available because information about gender is not provided for all trainees.

Training and enterprise councils (TECs) are required to ensure the promotion of equality of opportunity between all individuals in access to, treatment on, and outcome from the agreement between the Secretary of State and the TECs.

Trainees

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what guidance he gives to training and enterprise councils on the levels of output-related funding for organisations training trainees with severe learning difficulties;

(2) what guidance he gives to TECs on developing performance indicators for output related funding specifically suited to providers training special needs trainees with learning difficulties.

Mr. Jackson: Output-related funding is paid to training and enterprise councils by the Department for a number of outputs under employment training and youth training. In 1992-93, these will include City and Guilds of London Institute wordpower and numberpower qualifications for trainees with severe literacy and numeracy difficulties, and national vocational qualifications at level 1 for YT trainees with special training needs for whom training aimed at NVQ level 2 is not thought to be realistic. It is entirely a matter for training and enterprise councils as to how they pass on funds to training providers.

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the level of funding for special needs training within the youth training and employment training budgets for 1992-93.

Mr. Jackson: TECs are obliged to take into account training needs of special needs clients within their business plans.

The proportion of training budgets allocated to provision for people with special training needs is the responsibility of individual training and enterprise councils (TECs) and is determined by local needs and priorities.

Older Workers

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what will be the composition of the advisory group to assist in encouraging, identifying and disseminating good employment practice with regard to older workers, as proposed in "People, Jobs and Opportunity" (Cm. 1810).

Mr. Jackson: I shall chair the advisory group for older workers as the Minister with responsibility for equal opportunity in employment. The membership will be chosen from a variety of sources, including voluntary sector organisations representing the interests of older people, and organisations representing the interests of employers and employees. I am particularly keen to see women well represented in the group. There may also be places for individuals known to have an interest in the field.

Degrees

Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish the percentage of the population within each region of the country, including Greater London, who hold first degrees.

Mr. Jackson: The latest available estimates are given in the following table.

Percentage of persons of working age who hold a degree[1]

Region	Percentage

Labour Statistics, York

Mr. Caborn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many full-time males, part-time males, full-time females and part-time females in employment in the City of York currently earn less than £3·40 per hour.

Mr. Forth: The information from the "1991 New Earnings Survey" closest to that requested is given in the following table.

Mr. Jackson: The information requested can be obtained from the NOMIS database in the Library.

Mr. Caborn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will state the total number of men and women in employment, both full and part-time, in the City of York, and the number in each of these categories who currently earn (a) more than £21,060 per annum, (b) more than £35,000 per annum, (c) more than £40,000 per annum and (d) more than £50,000 per annum.

Mr. Forth: The latest available information about employment in local areas is from the 1989 census of employment and relates to employees only. The numbers of employees in employment in the York local authority district at September 1989 were as follows:

	Thousands
Males
Full time	25·5
Part time	2·4
Females
Full time	15·6
Part time	15·0

Information on the percentages of employees earning more than certain amounts per week is available from the "1991 New Earnings Survey". Figures are available only at county level and for full-time employees. They are given in the following table, for the available levels of weekly earnings which correspond most closely to the annual amounts specified in the question.

Mr. Caborn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish a table showing the number of full-time employees in employment in the City of York in 1979 and in each year since (a) in all manufacturing jobs and (b) in each of the following industrial groups (i) railways, (ii) cocoa, chocolate and sugar confectionery, (iii) manufacturing of railway and tramway vehicles, (iv) printing and publishing, (v) scheduled road passenger transport, (vi) road haulage, (vii) postal services and (viii) telecommunications.

Mr. Jackson: Information for employees in employment according to industry and by district is available only from the censuses of employment for 1981, 1984, 1987 and 1989. This can be obtained, subject to the confidentially restrictions of the Statistics of Trade Act 1947, from the NOMIS database in the Library.

Mr. Caborn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish a table showing the average gross weekly earnings of full-time males, full-time females and part-time females on adult rates in (a) the City of York, (b) north Yorkshire, (c) England, (d) Greater London and (e) the City of Canterbury in 1979 and each year since then.

Mr. Forth: The available information is published in tables 110 and 113 of part E and table 180 of part F of the "New Earnings Survey" reports for each year since 1979, except for that shown in the following table. Information is not available for the cities of York or Canterbury.

Job Centre, Stamford-le-Hope

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will consider re-opening the Stamford-le-Hope jobcentre.

Mr. Jackson: Questions on operational matters in the Employment Service executive agency are the responsibility of Mike Fogden, the agency's chief executive, to whom I have referred this question for reply.

HEALTH

Ozone Layer

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research has been undertaken to identify the groups most at risk from the consequences of the thinning of the ozone layer in the northern hemisphere.

Mr. Dorrell: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Dewsbury (Mrs. Taylor) on 20 December 1991 at column 354.

Skin Cancer

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the number of cases and deaths from skin cancer in 1970, 1980 and between the years 1985 and 1990.

Mr. Dorrell: The available data are set out in the table. The upward trend in the number of both registrations and deaths from malignant melanoma of the skin is a matter of concern. The possible relation between this trend and exposure to UV radiation is one of the issues on which we are seeking advice from the Committee on Medical Aspects of Radiation in the Environment (COMARE), as announced in my reply to the hon. Member for Dewsbury (Mrs. Taylor) on 20 February at column 272.

The total number of: 1) Cases (registrations); and 2) deaths, from skin cancer (ICD's 172 and 173), by sex, 1971 1980, 1985 and 1986. 1987-1990, deaths only. England and Wales

Capital and Revenue Expenditure, Shropshire

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what was the capital and revenue expenditure by Shropshire health authority and its predecessor authority in 1978-79, 1982-83, 1986-87 and 1991-92;

(2) what was the capital and revenue expenditure on family practitioner services in Shropshire in 1978-79, 1982-83, 1986-87 and 1991-92.

Mr. Dorrell: The information requested and derived from annual accounts submitted to the Department for the financial years 1978-79, 1982-83, 1986-87 and 1990-91 (the latest available) is shown in the table. Equivalent information for 1991-92 will be available in the autumn.

1986-87	28,777	40,199
1990-91	45,000	48,150

Sources: Annual accounts of the Shropshire health authority, the West Midlands regional health authority and the Shropshire family health services authority and those of the predecessor health authorities and family practitioner committee (FPC).

Notes:

1. The figures have been expressed at 1991-92 prices by the use of the gross domestic product deflators.
2. The figures for total capital expenditure include costs for schemes within Shropshire which were accounted for by the west Midlands regional health authority (RHA). All expenditure incurred by that RHA for its region as a whole is excluded.
3. Capital expenditure in particular localities tends to vary from year to year mainly reflecting changes in the pattern of capital investment throughout the country.
4. All expenditure on family health services—FHS (formerly family practitioner services)—is essentially regarded as current (i.e. revenue) expenditure. It is not strictly attributable to particular districts and is recorded in annual accounts after the deduction of charges to patients.
5. The FHS figures for 1986-87 and 1990-91 also include the administrative expenses of the Shropshire family health services authority—£268,000 (cash) revenue, and £145,000 (cash) capital, in 1986-87 and £799,000 (cash) revenue, in 1990-91. Prior to 1 April 1985 the Shropshire FPC was associated with the Shropshire district (formerly area) health authority and its administrative costs formed a comparatively small part of the health authority's total expenditure and are not separately identifiable.

Chemists (Drug Purchases)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his estimate of the value to the NHS of the discount claw-back on drug purchases privately negotiated by pharmaceutical chemists in each of the past four years for which figures are available.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The discount recovered from community pharmacists in England and Wales in each of the past four years is given in the table.

Year	Discount recovered £ million
1987-88	134·0
1988-89	154·7
1989-90	171·5
1990-91	220·5

The discount recovery scheme ensures that the NHS benefits from the discounts pharmacists receive from wholesalers and manufacturers. The increase over the four years is due partly to increased drug costs and partly to increased discounts achieved.

Health Authorities (Staff)

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list for (a) each regional health authority and (b) each district health authority the number of (i) nurses and midwives, (ii) medical staff, (iii) general and senior managers, (iv) administrative and clerical staff, (v) ancillary staff and (vi) ambulance staff for 1991.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The regional health authority data are not yet available. District data could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Generic Drugs

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what new initiatives he intends to produce to increase the proportions of generic drugs prescribed by general practitioners.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The proportion of prescriptions written generically has risen from 20 per cent. in 1979 to 44 per cent. in 1990 as a result of the policies pursued by this Government. Further initiatives were introduced this year, with the indicative prescribing scheme and the appointment by each family health services authority of prescribing medical advisers. Medical advisers encourage general practitioners to prescribe drugs by their generic names for reasons of good professional practice and because of the opportunities for savings such prescribing creates.

Eye Tests and Dental Checks

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what would be the full year cost to the Exchequer in 1991-92 of introducing free eye tests and dental checks for (a) all people over state retirement age, (b) all those in receipt of a disability benefit and (c) both (a) and (b) together.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The estimated cost of introducing free sight tests for all people aged 65 and over in England for 1991-92 is approximately £25 million, and for introducing free dental examinations approximately £7 million. No estimate is available for people in receipt of a disability benefit. About 40 per cent. of the population are exempt from charges for dental examinations and sight tests.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is the estimated saving to the Exchequer from the abolition of free dental check-ups in the financial years (a) 1990-91, (b) 1991-92 and (c) 1992-93, in the United Kingdom;

(2) what would be the cost of every 10p reduction in the charges for (a) eye tests, (b) dental check-ups and (c) prescriptions, in 1991-92 and 1992-93, in the United Kingdom;

(3) what is the estimated saving to the Exchequer from the abolition of free eye tests in the financial years (a) 1990-91, (b) 1991-92 and (c) 1992-93 in the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 24 February 1992]: The estimated income from dental examination charges in England was about £55 million in 1990-91. We currently anticipate revenue of some £58 million in 1991-92, and £61 million in 1992-93. About 40 per cent. of the population are exempt from dental examination charges.

The cost of each 10p reduction in the charge for dental examinations is estimated at about £1·5 million in England in 1991-92; costs in 1992-93 would be similar. The cost of a notional 10p reduction from the current prescription charge level is estimated at a minimum of about £4 million in England in 1991-92, rising to about £5 million in 1992-93.

Costs would accelerate for each subsequent incremental reduction. There are no charges for NHS sight tests which are available to approximately 40 per cent. of the population.

Restricting entitlements to NHS sight tests to priority groups has resulted in estimated savings in England of about £90 million in 1990-91, with projected savings of about £100 million in 1991-92 and £110 million in 1992-93. The full year cost of re-introducing free NHS sight tests for everyone is estimated to be £165 million.

Information on Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland are matters for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland.

Claimants, Leeds

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security in the month of January in the Leeds metropolitan district how many people in receipt of income support or housing benefit were registered as being in receipt of retirement pension, disabled, or having children aged under five years; and how many of those so registered received cold weather payments.

Miss Widdecombe: I understand from Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency, that the information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Benefits, York

Mr. Cabom: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people in York were in receipt of supplementary benefit in each year from 1979 to 1987; and how many were in receipt of income support in each year since then.

Miss Widdecombe: The complete range of information requested in this question is not available. This is because statistics of a local nature are destroyed at regular intervals ranging from 18 months to five years. The information available from 1987 has been drawn from the income support management information statistics.

Statistics relating to supplementary benefit and income support recipients are collected from benefit offices on a quarterly basis. The figures show the number of recipients at a given date rather than for a particular period.

The York benefit office covers an area of approximately 450 square miles. It is not possible, except at disproportionate cost, to identify those customers who were living in the city of York itself. The figures for York benefit office since May 1987 are in the table.

Customers in receipt of Supplementary Benefit or Income Support from York benefit office since May 1987

Year	February	May	August	November
Supplementary Benefit (Predecessor of Income Support)
1987	—	15,109	15,423	14,705

1991	14,445	13,893	14,637	14,705

[1] A quarterly supplementary benefit count was not conducted in February 1988.

Community Care, York

Mr. Cabom: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a table indicating (a) the number of applications for community care grants received, (b) the number of community care grants paid and (c) the cash value of community care grants paid by the York local office in each month from January 1990 to December 1991 for each of the (i) elderly, (ii) mentally ill/handicaped, (iii) disabled/chronically sick, (iv) young persons leaving local authority care, (v) persons who have misused drugs/alcohol, (vi) ex-offenders, (vii) persons without a settled way of life and (viii) families under exceptional pressure priority groups.

Mr. Scott: I understand from Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency that the information is not available in the form requested.

Social Fund, York

Mr. Cabora: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will (a) state how many applications for social fund loans from the York local office were refused on the grounds of inability to pay and (b) show this figure as a percentage of all applications for loans from the York local office in 1988-89, 1989-90, 1990-91 and so far in 1991-92.

Mr. Scott: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Social Security Benefits

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security for each social security benefit what has been (a) the number of claimants, (b) the cash expenditure and (c) the expenditure expressed in 1991 prices for each year since 1979.

Miss Widdecombe: The available information is in the following tables.

Note.—1991-92 figures are estimated outturn. Most central Government support for rent rebates appears in the Department of the Environment and Welsh Office programmes in 1990-92, and subsequent years, as rent rebate subsidy in England and Wales and is now paid from local authorities' housing revenue accounts.

War Pensions Scheme

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the latest position regarding discussions to simplify the war pensions scheme.

Miss Widdecombe: Proposals for simplifying the war pensions scheme and improving its administration were discussed with the war pensions central advisory committee on 5 December 1991. Its response was broadly to welcome the thrust of the proposed changes. Final decisions will be made and announced after consideration of the many detailed comments is completed. We have previously indicated that resources available to the war pensions scheme and individual cash entitlements of war pensioners will not be reduced as a result. That remains the position.

Income Support

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many income support claimants who work between 16 and 24 hours a week currently (a) receive direct help with mortgage interest payments and (b) are eligible to apply to the social fund for help with the cost of furniture and other essential household items; and if he will subdivide the figures into childless, couples with children, and lone parent household categories;

(2) whether income support claimaints who work between 16 and 24 hours a week and who currently (a) receive direct help with mortgage interest payments and (b) are eligible to apply to the social fund for help with the cost of furniture and other items will have their eligibility for assistance fully protected after April 1992 by special protection arrangements.

Miss Widdecombe: We estimate that around 15,000 people currently receiving income support and working between 16 and 24 hours a week are receiving help with mortgage interest payments. Because of the small size of the sample, it is not possible to subdivide this number into household categories. Anyone receiving income support, whether or not they are working, is eligible to apply to the social fund for help under the normal rules.

People whose entitlement to income support is protected when the hours rule changes from 24 to 16 a week from 7 April will have the same rights to help with their mortgage interest payments and to apply for social fund payments as they do at present.

Business Reply Envelopes

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of DSS agency offices have withdrawn business reply envelopes; how many people were affected by the withdrawal of business reply envelopes; and what are the estimated savings for the agency in the year 1992-93 from the withdrawal of these envelopes.

Miss Widdecombe: Customer services are a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Independent Tribunal Service

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what influence the president of the Independent Tribunal Service has over allocation of resources from the DSS; to whom the president is accountable; and to whom complaints about dissatisfaction about the administrative arrangements of the independent Tribunal Service may be addressed.

Miss Widdecombe: The president of the Independent Tribunal Service, his honour Judge Holden, is appointed by the Lord Chancellor. He may appoint such officers and staff as he thinks fit to carry out his statutory duties, with the consent of the Secretary of State and the Treasury as to numbers, remuneration and other terms and conditions of service. In using the resources so provided he is accountable to the departmental accounting officer. Complaints about dissatisfaction with the administrative arrangements of the Independent Tribunal Service should be addressed to the president, his honour Judge Holden.

Mirror Group Pension Fund

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made of the cost of underwriting the guaranteed minimum pension for the Mirror Group pension fund; and if he has agreed to underwrite the guaranteed minimum pension for the Mirror Group pension fund.

Miss Widdecombe: It is too early to make any assessment of the possible costs involved. Existing legislation provides protection for those members of pension schemes who have been contracted out of the state earnings related pensions scheme (SERPS) introduced in 1978. If any scheme is wound up there is a statutory provision designed to protect the guaranteed minimum pension which contracted out schemes are required to provide.

Personal Pensions

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the latest information available on the level of earnings of people with personal pensions.

Miss Widdecombe: The latest available information for the year ended April 1990 is that the average pay of appropriate personal pension holders, including those in part-time work, is £9,740.

Pension Contributions

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether the protocol to the treaty of Rome deeming pension contributions paid before May 1990 not to be deferred pay in the United Kingdom and the Netherlands includes employee pension contributions which are deducted from the employee's pay packet or salary.

Mr. Jack: The protocol to article 119 of the treaty of Rome, agreed at Maastricht, will, when ratified, apply to all member states and relates to benefits under occupational social security schemes attributable to periods of employment prior to 17 May 1990.

Contributions to occupational pension schemes before 17 May 1990 will continue to qualify scheme members for benefits on the same basis as when their contributions were made.

Pensions (Christmas Bonus)

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the rationale for paying the Christmas bonus to people in receipt of their pension in the week commencing 2 December and excluding those whose pensions were first payable in the Christmas week.

Miss Widdecombe: Since the Christmas bonus was introduced in 1972 the practice has been to make payments to those who qualify no later than the first week in December. This ensures the bonus reaches all 12 million recipients in time for Christmas.

Benefits (Expenditure)

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the spending on (a) disabled people's benefits and (b) retired people's benefit in (i) 1979-80, (ii) 1983-84, (iii) 1987-88 and (iv) 1991-92 at September 1991 prices.

Mr. Scott: Total benefit spending on long-term sick and disabled people and on elderly people, in cash and in 1991-92 prices, is given in the table.

	Disabled people		Elderly people
	Cash	1991-92 prices	Cash	1991-92 prices
	£ million	£ million	£ million	£ million
1979-80	2·1	4·9	10·1	23·6
1983-84	4·1	6·6	17·7	28·2
1987-88	6·7	8·8	23·1	30·5
1991-92	12·3	12·3	31·4	31·4

Note: 1991-92 figures are estimated outturn.

Income Support Disability Premium

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will ensure that all claimants in receipt of attendance allowance or the new disability housing allowance are informed that their benefit acts as a passport to the income support disability premium.

Mr. Scott: When customers are awarded either attendance allowance or disability living allowance they will receive an information sheet with their award notice explaining that if they are on income support they may be able to get more money because of their disability, or indeed that they may now qualify for income support if they did not get it previously. More fundamentally, we are introducing special procedures so that income support entitlement can be reassessed automatically following the award of either attendance allowance or disability living allowance.

Statutory Sick Pay

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the number of (a) men and (b) women who will lose in real terms as a result of the freezing of statutory sick pay for 1991-92 and 1992-93.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is not available and cannot be accurately estimated. Over 90 per cent. of employees work for employers with occupational sick pay (OSP) schemes and will have their statutory sick pay (SSP) topped up by OSP. The 1988 survey of occupational sick pay schemes found that the majority of employers with such schemes top up SSP to full pay. Most employees affected by the freezing of the higher rate of SSP will, therefore, have experienced no reduction in the amount they received when sick. Those employees on the lower rate have had their SSP entitlement fully protected by full retail prices index increases.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the total savings to the Exchequer for each year as a result of freezing higher rate statutory sick pay in 1991-92 and 1992-93.

Mr. Scott: The total estimated savings are:

	£ million
1991-92	67
1992-93	89

Pensioners (Home Owners)

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of pensioners are owner occupiers and have paid off their mortgage.

Miss Widdecombe: The latest figures available show that in 1988, 50 per cent. of pensioners were owner occupiers, of whom 46 per cent. owned their homes outright. This compares well with 1979, when only 38 per cent. owned their homes outright.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Teachers, North Yorkshire

Mr. Caborn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will show the full-time equivalent number of teachers employed in (a) north Yorkshire infant and primary schools and (b) north Yorkshire secondary schools in each year from 1974 to 1991.

Mr. Fallon: The full-time equivalent number of qualified teachers in maintained primary and secondary schools in North Yorkshire local education authority in January of each year is shown in the following table.

Full-time equivalent of qualified teachers in maintained primary and secondary schools in North Yorkshire Local Education Authority—January 1974-1991.

Pupil Expenditure

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the expenditure per pupil in the county of Shropshire in 1978-79, 1982-83, 1986-87 and 1991-92.

Mr. Fallon: The latest year for which actual spending information is available in 1989-90. Shropshire local education authority's school-based expenditure per nursery, primary and secondary school pupil is shown in the table. The real terms increase in per pupil spending between 1978-79 and 1989-90 was 56 per cent.

Net institutional expenditure[1] per pupil[2]
Nursery, primary and secondary schools

Year	Current prices	1989-90 prices[3]
1978-79	405	940
1982-83	765	1,100
1986-87	1,070	1,290
1989-90	1,470	1,470

Notes to table
[1] Net institutional expenditure covers the direct costs in schools of salaries and wages, premises and certain supplies and services. It does not include the cost of school meals, home to school transport, LEA central administration, and financing costs of capital expenditure.
[2] The figures are derived from Shropshire local education authority's returns of its spending to the Department of the Environment and of its pupil numbers to the Department of Education and Science.
[3] Figures for 1978-79, 1982-83 and 1986-87 have been repriced to 1989-90 prices using the GDP (Market Prices) Deflator Index.

Sixth Forms

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the total number of school sixth forms in England in (a) 1979-80 and (b) on the latest available figures.

Mr. Eggar: The numbers of maintained secondary schools with sixth forms in England, in 1980 and 1991 were 2,487 and 1,998 respectively. These figures include sixth form colleges in England.

Teachers' Superannuation

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, pursuant to his answers of 11 December, Official Report, column 448-49 and 2 December, Official Report, column 16 on the teachers' superannuation scheme, what is the basis for paying widowers' pensions in respect of service from 6 April 1988 and charging extra for the optional cover from 1 April 1972 to 5 April 1988 when widows' pensions are paid on all service from 1 April 1972.

Mr. Fallon: The normal contribution rate, of which an individual teacher pays 6 per cent. of salary and his or her employer the balance, is determined by the Government Actuary in his quinquennial valuations of the scheme. For the period 1 April 1972 to 5 April 1988, the Government Actuary took into account the cost of providing widows' pensions as a benefit of the scheme but not widowers' pensions and the normal contribution rate reflected this. In his most recent valuation, the actuary has taken account of the fact that widowers' benefits are now provided by the scheme with effect from 6 April 1988. Widowers' benefits prior to 6 April 1988 have not been covered by the contributions already paid by teachers and employers and on that basis the arrangements set out in my answer of 2 December were introduced.

A-levels, Islington

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he intends to publish the report of Her Majesty's inspectorate in relation to the inspection carried out in November of the Islington sixth form centre and the two Islington further education colleges; and what was the finding of this report in relation to the proportion of A-level passes as compared with the national average.

Mr. Eggar: The report from HM inspectorate is shortly to be received by my right hon. and learned Friend, once received, it will be published as quickly as possible. When the report is published I will write to the hon. Member with the information on A-level passes.

School Meals

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what has been the number of children entitled to free school meals in each year since 1979.

Mr. Fallon: Since the implementation of the 1986 Social Security Act in 1988, only children whose families are in receipt of income support and those children who are themselves eligible for income support are entitled to receive free school meals. Prior to this local authorities had discretionary powers to provide free school meals and a variety of schemes existed. Consequently, it is not possible to give the number of children entitled to free meals before this date.

A total of 821,373 free school meals were taken in maintained schools in England on the census date in January 1991.

Sport

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the chairmanships of the proposed United Kingdom Sports Commission and the Sports Council for England.

Mr. Atkins: As announced on 19 December 1991 in the policy statement "Sport and Active Recreation", the Government intend to replace the Sports Council of Great Britain with a United Kingdom sports commission and a sports council for England, subject to the approval by the Queen in Council, of the royal charters for the new bodies.

My right hon. and learned Friend intends to appoint Peter Yarranton as chairman of the United Kingdom sports commission, and Ian Beer as chairman of the sports council for England. Mr. Yarranton is presently chairman of the Sports Council of Great Britain. He has agreed to continue in that capacity until the transition to the new arrangements has been effected.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Political Talks

4. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the progress of talks between the political parties of Northern Ireland.

Mr. Brooke: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Falkirk, West (Mr. Canavan).

19. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what further steps he proposes to take in respect in respect of new political initiatives in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

25. Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on his current efforts to bring about a political settlement in the Province.

Mr. Brooke: I refer the hon. Members to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Falkirk, West (Mr. Canavan).

Security

15. Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what discussions he has had with the recently elected Prime Minister of the Republic of Ireland on security issues.

Mr. Brooke: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister, the Minister of State and I held a meeting with the new Taoiseach, Minister for Foreign Affairs and Minister of Justice yesterday, during which a range of security and other issues were discussed. I shall be meeting the Irish Foreign Affairs and Justice Ministers again at a meeting of the Anglo-Irish Conference which will be held shortly.

20. Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about the security situation.

Mr. Brooke: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Attercliffe (Sir P. Duffy).

24. Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a further statement on the security situation in the Province.

Mr. Brooke: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Attercliffe (Sir P. Duffy).

Brook Advisory Clinic

16. Miss Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he will visit the newly opened Brook advisory clinic in Belfast to discuss funding.

Mr. Hanley: I understand that the Belfast Brook centre has not yet, in fact, been opened. As the Eastern health and social services board is responsible for the funding of the services to be provided by the Brook centre when operational, it would not be appropriate for either my right hon. Friend or I to enter into separate discussions with the centre on this matter.

Industrial Development Board

17. Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the achievements to date of the Industrial Development Board in targeting new jobs.

Mr. Needham: During the six-year period from 1 April 1985 to 31 March 1991, 27,583 jobs were promoted by the IDB against a target of 32,435.

Local Management of Schools

18. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many schools have devolved budgets under the local management of schools arrangements; how many schools are grant maintained; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: In Northern Ireland 237 schools and 24 colleges of further education have fully delegated budgets and 1,050 have partially delegated budgets under LMS and LMC arrangements. There are no grant-maintained schools.

Tourist Board

21. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he will appoint a new chief executive of the Northern Ireland tourist board.

Mr. Needham: The appointment of a chief executive is a matter for the Northern Ireland tourist board. I understand, however, from the chairman of the board that the post was recently advertised, with a closing date for receipt of applications on 2 March 1992.

Buses

22. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he has visited plants in Northern Ireland producing buses.

Mr. Needham: I visited Walter Alexander and Co. (Belfast) Limited's bus body building plant at Newtownabbey on 1 November 1990. My right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State visited Robert Wright and Son (Coachworks) Ltd. at Balleymena on 19 June 1990.

Rural Development

23. Mr. Dover: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made towards encouraging rural development; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: Following the report of the Inter-Departmental Committee on Rural Development in 1991 an independent Rural Development Council, representing a wide spectrum of rural interests has been established to provide advice and resources to rural communities to help them develop multi-sectoral regeneration plans for their local areas.

Within the Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland a rural development policy division has also been set up and three rural development area co-ordinators at senior level have been appointed to provide integrated statutory responses to local community plans.

Museums

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what plans he has to provide funding for museums in Northern Ireland other than those he already funds;

(2) what plans he has to publish a policy statement for museums in Northern Ireland.

Dr. Mawhinney: There are no immediate plans to extend funding to local authority museums, other than those to meet half of the cost of any improvement grant which may be awarded by the museums and galleries improvement fund, a joint venture between Government and the Wolfson charity trust.

Future policy for the support of local authority museums in Northern Ireland will be considered following the publication, later this year, of a report by the Northern Ireland museums advisory committee of its study into the feasibility of establishing an area museum service for the Province.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he last met the Irish Museums Association in Ireland to discuss the role and funding of museums in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has never met the Irish Museums Association.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the budgetary allocation to museums in Northern Ireland in each of the financial years from 1 April 1988 to 31 March 1991 inclusive.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information requested is as follows:

	1988-89 £	1989-90 £	1990-91 £
Ulster Museum	2,876,400	3,529,300	4,136,000

Ulster American Folk Park	685,000	641,000	792,800

Community Services

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the amount allocated to each district council in Northern Ireland for community services in the financial years from 1 April 1988 to 31 March 1991.

Dr. Mawhinney: The amounts allocated were as follows:

Government Offices (Relocation)

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to relocate central Government offices into the constituency of South Down in response to the provision of the Star telecommunications network within the area.

Dr. Mawhinney: The location or relocation of civil service work is considered whenever a new function emerges, an existing function changes its organisational structure, or when the lease of a civil service occupied building expires. The provision of good communication links, such as those now available under the STAR telecommunications network, is just one of a number of factors which are taken into account when deciding upon relocation options.

There are no plans at present to relocate any central Government functions to the South Down constituency.

South Eastern Education and Library Board

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proposals he is currently considering from South Eastern education and library board in respect of a headquarters on a single site.

Dr. Mawhinney: The South Eastern board is currently reviewing the options for locating its headquarters on a single site. The Department of Education is awaiting the outcome of these investigations before entering into further discussions with the board.

Earnings

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many (a) men and (b) women in each region earn (i) above and (ii) below the national insurance lower earnings limit; and how many are between the lower earnings limit and the upper earnings limit, in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Hanley: Northern Ireland is regarded as a single region for national insurance purposes. The information requested is as follows. The figures refer to the latest estimates for the current year.

	Men	Women
Number of people who earn above lower earnings limit	245,000	185,000
Number of people who earn below lower earnings limit	25,000	65,000
Number of people who earn between upper and lower earnings limit	200,000	180,000

Pensioners

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the latest estimates of how many pensioners are (a) male, (b) female, (c) single and (d) married in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Hanley: In mid-1990 the estimated numbers of men and women at state pension age and over in Northern Ireland were as follows:

	Number
Men	76,000
Women	155,000

Source: OPCS mid-year estimates.

I regret that information is not available on the marital status of these pensioners.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many pensioners there are over the age of 75 years divided into males and females; and what is (a) their average income from all sources and (b) the income distribution of such pensioners, in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 24 February 1992]: In mid-1990 the estimated numbers of men and women over the age of 75 in Northern Ireland were as follows:

	Number
Men	28,000
Women	54,000

Source: OPCS mid-year estimates.

I regret that sufficient information is not available to enable reliable estimates of the average income or income distribution of these men and women to be made.

Social Security Fraud

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what is his estimate of the cost of social security fraud to his Department of Health and Social Services in each of the last five years;

(2) how many people have been jailed as a result of being found guilty of social security fraud in each of the last five years;

(3) how many people were charged with social security fraud in each of the last five years.

Mr. Hanley: Social security operational matters are the responsibility of Mr. Alec Wylie, chief executive of the Social Security Agency. He will write to the hon. Gentleman and copies of his reply will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Butchers' Blocks

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what requirements have been introduced by the European Community in connection with the butcher's wooden block upon which cuts of meat are prepared; and if he will make a statement on the future of this butcher's block.

Mr. Hanley: None. A proposed European Community directive on hygiene of foodstuffs presently under negotiation, would require that all articles, fittings, and equipment with which food comes into contact should be so constructed, be of such materials and be kept in such good order, repair and condition as to prevent, so far as is reasonably practical, any risk of contamination of the food. Similar provisions are already contained in existing United Kingdom food hygiene law.

Fisheries Patrol Boat

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the acquisition cost and what are the budgeted running costs of the Northern Ireland fisheries patrol boat, Ken Vickers.

Mr. Hanley: The acquisition cost was some £450,000, 50 per cent. of which will be met by the EC. The estimated running costs, including crewing, for 1992-93 are £72,400.

Citizens Charter

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been the cost to date of the preparation, printing, publication and distribution of the citizens charter for Northern Ireland.

Dr. Mawhinney: A total of £120,400.

Low Energy Lighting

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he will make it his policy progressively to introduce low-energy lighting in all the buildings operated by his Department.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 25 February 1992]: Low-energy light fittings are already used in all new installations and to replace fittings which have reached the end of their useful life. In other circumstances low-energy units are fitted where it is cost-effective to do so.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Captive Birds

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what further information he has on the levels of mortality in imported captive birds.

Mr. Gummer: The third report by the Ministry on mortalities in imported captive birds, relating to imports in 1990, shows that of 176,000 birds, 3,500 were dead on arrival and a further 18,100 died in post-import quarantine. The average mortality remains unacceptable but has fallen slightly to 12·3 per cent. compared with 12·7 per cent. in the previous year. The statistics give further evidence of the major problems in the bird trade which the Government are taking vigorous action to address. I am placing copies of the report in the Library of the House.

The Under-Secretary of State for the Environment, the hon. Member for Banbury (Mr. Baldry), has just announced a far-reaching package of measures which underline our commitment. Clearly these issues need to be addressed internationally, and at the forthcoming Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species conference the United Kingdom will take a leading role in pressing for strengthened international controls. We are also seeking tough action in the European Community. We are determined that any future trade in wild birds should be conducted under proper conditions and that exporting countries, airlines and traders should all play their part and recognise their responsibilities for ensuring the highest standards of care.

Ministerial Appointments

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list all the public bodies to which he makes appointments and all the committees within his Ministry which include outside experts appointed by him.

Mr. Gummer: Information about public bodies to which I make appointments is given in "Public Appointments: a Handbook for Women's Organisations" and annually in "Public Bodies", copies of which are in the Library. To provide a fully comprehensive list of all bodies and committees to which I make appointments would be disproportionately expensive.

Oilseed Harvest

Mr. Hague: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what EC support arrangements will apply in the United Kingdom for the 1992 oilseed harvest.

Mr. Gummer: A new EC support system is being introduced because the existing arrangements were found to be incompatible with GATT rules. The scheme will apply to rapeseed, sunflower seed and soya bean crops harvested in summer 1992. The scheme will provide a payment related to the world price made at a flat rate per hectare and paid direct to growers.

The agriculture departments will be operating the scheme and will issue explanatory booklets and application forms as soon as possible. These will be sent to all known oilseed growers. Others will be able to obtain copies from the Ministry's regional service centres and the offices of other agriculture departments. I will place copies in the Libraries of the House.

The general rules of the scheme were adopted in December 1991 in council regulation 3766/91. A Commission regulation establishing more detailed rules is expected to be published shortly. When it is, I will make a further announcement. Growers sowing seed after the entry into force of the Commission regulation (three days after the date of its publication in the Official Journal) will be subject to certain restrictions on the land on which they may sow if they are to be eligible for aid. They will only be eligible if they plant on arable land. That is defined in the Council regulation as "land cultivated during the period 1989-90 to 1990-91, including land shown to have been fallowed in conformity with a publicly funded scheme, temporarily under grass as part of an arable rotation or exceptionally arable land fallowed throughout this period".

The intention of this provision is to prevent the ploughing up of permanent grassland.

In addition to crops harvested from certified seed, home-saved seed will be eligible for aid, as will seed grown for industrial use and seed grown for sowing. Various requirements in relation to these matters, which are laid down in the Commission regulation, are being waived this year because it would be inequitable to apply them after growers have taken decisions on what seed to sow for the 1992 harvest. Specific obligations will however apply in future years, and these will be publicised in advance of growers' decisions on plantings for 1993 harvest.

Growers' completed applications must be received by the agriculture departments by 30 May. The Commission regulation provides for applications received in the following 30 days to suffer a 1 per cent. cut in the aid for each day that they are late up to a maximum cut of 30 per cent. of the aid. Applications received thereafter will be ineligible for any aid. Applications must be supported by a map—from the 1:10,000 Ordnance Survey series, or a map of an equivalent quality—showing the precise location of the crops.

After growers' applications have been checked, a first payment (of up to 50 per cent. of the total) will be made by 30 September. After the grower has submitted a "harvest declaration", further checks will be made.

The remainder of the aid will be paid by the end of March 1993. There will also be some payments, on which the Commission has not yet made a proposal, to growers who hold the crop off the market, and thus help to ensure orderly marketing.

Different rates of aid will be paid in England, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland, to reflect their different average yields. Last autumn's and this spring's sowings will receive the same rate of aid. This may change for 1993 crop.

The regulations contain a number of measures designed to penalise inaccurate applications and to prevent fraud. Penalties for fraud can include disqualification from support in the year following the committal of certain offences. A statutory instrument will be introduced providing in particular for powers of entry and inspection.

This scheme is free-standing. There is no linked set-aside requirement, nor is there any simplified scheme for small producers.

Dietary Supplements

Mr. Hague: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on future controls on dietary supplements.

Mr. Gummer: In March last year the Government published a report by officials from the Department of Health and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on dietary supplements and health foods. The report was not a statement of policy but was intended to provide a basis for discussion. It was circulated to some 160 trade, consumer and other organisations for comment. Last December the European Commission issued a discussion paper on possible future controls on dietary supplements which covered much of the same ground as our earlier report. Views on the Commission paper were invited from all those who had commented on our report.

In the light of all the comments that we have received on the two documents we have concluded that there is a good case for the introduction of some specific controls on dietary supplements. However, we believe that a balance needs to be struck between on the one hand ensuring public health together with clear labelling information and, on the other hand, maintaining the availability of safe products for which there is clearly a strong public demand.

We have recently submitted our views on future legislation to the European Commission in the form of an outline draft directive on dietary supplements. I have arranged for copies of the draft to be sent to all those who responded to the consultation exercises and to be placed in the Libraries of both Houses of Parliament.

At this stage we are only seeking to establish the broad framework for a directive. Regulatory regimes for supplements differ considerably throughout the Community and it will be important to settle questions of principle before we move on to more technical matters.

I understand that the Commission is due to hold a preliminary discussion on dietary supplements in early March. We will continue to keep all the interests involved informed on the progress of these discussions and will be consulting further on particular detailed issues such as the maximum daily dose limits which might be laid down for individual supplements.

Adulterated Wine

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has about adulterated Italian wine on sale in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: My Department learnt on 11 February that some imported Italian wines had been illegally contaminated.

AS soon as the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food became aware of the potential problem, Ministry officials drew together United Kingdom trade interests and the Italian authorities to discuss the illegal addition of methylisothiocyanate to those Italian wines. Meetings of all parties concerned were held last week and again this week. A list of all producers known to have been using this chemical has been obtained from the Italian Government and we have identified nine importers in the United Kingdom. They have all been notified of the need to implement a full recall of suspect wines and to submit samples for analysis and have co-operated fully with my Department. Details of those wines have also been sent to local authorities and to environmental health officers to enable them to check that no stock remains on sale, including at minor outlets, hotels and restaurants. Territorial departments and the port health authorities have been similarly notified. In addition we have asked the trade to put in hand immediate testing of all Italian wines to confirm that no other supplies are affected. Independent checking is also being undertaken by the Ministry. We have asked for all test data to be sent to us for incorporation into a comprehensive data base and those results will be made available to the public. Should any further cases of contamination be discovered, immediate steps will be taken to ensure that affected supplies are immediately withdrawn from sale.

Our officials have expressed serious concern to the Italian authorities about this incident and are engaged in further discussions to clarify the extent of the problem, how it arose and what steps are being taken in Italy to ensure that no further adulterated wine is placed on the market.

Fish Conservation

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a further statement on the recent agreement of EC fisheries Ministers for the conservation of fish stocks.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to the reply, 6 February 1992 column 275]: Fishing effort in Europe exceeds what the stocks can at present withstand. Some commercially important species are under severe pressure. Significant steps have already been taken at Community and national level, including the technical measures that will take effect later this year. But more than this is needed if our conservation policies are to be fully effective.

My colleagues in the other Fisheries Departments share this concern. We have looked at a wide range of options. It has not been easy to identify the best way forward. Conservationist have concentrated on their fears for the future of the stocks, while the fishing industry has continued to press strongly for a decommissioning grant scheme. The Government have made clear that this could be considered, but only as part of a package that would have to make a definite contribution to the conservation of fish stocks. Our key objective must be to reduce fishing effort if we are to protect the stocks for fishermen today and their children tomorrow.

My right hon. Friends and I therefore now propose to introduce a programme of closely-linked measures. The objective will be to reduce fishing effort over the period up to 1996, to meet a target which we shall need to quantify and agree with the Commission in line with our Community obligation under the 1992-1996 multi-annual guidance programme. An essential feature of our programme will be control over fishing effort, through the introduction of a freeze in 1993 to hold effort at its 1991 level, followed in the years 1994 to 1996 by arrangements to reduce entitlements to days at sea to the extent necessary to achieve the overall target. In assessing the size of these reductions, account will be taken of the impact on fishing effort of the other measures described here.

It is our intention to seek to have effort control arrangements in place for 1993. Once this is done, we can bring forward measures to reduce capacity. There will be a decommissioning scheme to operate over two years, with provision for expenditure of up to £25 million. The scheme will be cash limited and subject to tight controls and will be designed to take out the maximum amount of fishing effort. No decommissioning payments will be committed until measures for controlling and reducing fishing effort are in place.

In the meanwhile, the producer organisations established under Community rules to which many fishermen belong will be encouraged to play a more active part in rationalising the structure of the fleet, and certain changes in rules will be made to facilitate that.

Also, the rules governing transfer of vessel licences will be amended so that the existing amount by which capacity has to be reduced on aggregation will be increased, and a penalty will be applied to other forms of transfer too.

To complement these measures to reduce effort and capacity, restrictive licensing will be extended to vessels 10 metres and below in length so that this sector of the fleet cannot expand further. This change will take effect in 1993 but in principle licences will then be issued only to vessels which are already actively involved in fishing now. My Department is making a separate more detailed announcement on this.

Finally, in relation to effort controls provision will be made for fishermen to trade their days at sea entitlements along with fishing licences. This will help the industry to adjust to effort restrictions through rationalisation.

We have begun discussions with the Commission on ways in which these measures could be accommodated in Community legislation and we shall be consulting the Commission and the industry about the details of this important conservation package. When parliamentary time permits the Government will introduce the primary legislation which will be needed for some elements of this package such as the trading arrangements described above.

My right hon. Friends and I believe that a package on these lines will greatly assist the conservation of fish stocks, and will thus be in the best long-term interest of our fishermen. We look forward to constructive discussion of this package with the industry.

SCOTLAND

Insulin

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many representations he has received (a) in favour of and (b) against issuing needles for insulin-injecting pens on prescription to diabetics during the current session; and if he will make a statement;

(2) when he intends to provide needles for insulin-injecting pens on prescription for diabetics; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: In the current session there have been 11 representations in favour of the issue of needles for insulin injecting pens on prescription to diabetics. Where such needles are considered by a consultant to be clinically necessary, they can be obtained free of charge through the hospital service.

The wider availability of needles for insulin injecting pens on prescription will be considered when the evaluation of the specification and costs, presently being carried out by the Department of Health on behalf of all health departments, is completed.

Lockerbie

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what new evidence he has received about the responsibility for the Lockerbie bombing since 14 November.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The warrant issued on 14 November 1991 for the arrest of two Libyans for their involvement in the bombing of PA 103 resulted from an independent investigation lasting over three years. That investigation continues. As the Lord Advocate said in his announcement on 14 November 1991 proceedings are active for the purposes of the Contempt of Court Act 1981 and he cannot and will not comment on the evidence on which the charges are based. Nor can he comment on evidence received since the warrant was issued.

Crime Statistics

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many crimes per 100,000 people were recorded in 1979 and the latest year for which figures are available;

(2) how many crimes were recorded in Scotland in 1979 and the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 26 February 1992]: The number of crimes recorded by the police per 100,000 people in Scotland in 1979 and 1990 was 6,710 and 10,502 respectively. The number of crimes recorded by the police in Scotland for those same years was 346,680 and 535,864 respectively.[1]

[1] All the figures given are based on the revised classification of crimes and offences which was introduced at the beginning of 1980. The 1979 figures include crimes reported to the Procurator Fiscal by agencies other than the police (for example the Department of Health and Social Security) in which a prosecution was taken. In 1982, there were about 6,400 such cases so the overall effect on recorded crime is small.

NHS Waiting Lists

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people were on national health service waiting lists in Scotland in 1979; and how many there were on the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 26 February 1992]: The number of in-patients on the waiting list at 31 March 1979 was 76,968 compared with 60,693 at 31 March 1991. These figures are not directly comparable as an improved statistical information system was introduced in 1988.

Separate day case waiting list figures are available only from 1989. The number of day cases on the waiting list at 31 March 1991 was 18,673.

Manufacturing

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the level of manufacturing output in 1979; and what was the change between 1979 and latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 26 February 1992]: The index (1985 = 100) of manufacturing output in Scotland in 1979 was 103·2 and in 1990, the latest year for which figures are available, was 115·4. This represents an increase of 11·8 per cent. in the 11 years between 1979 and 1990.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the level of manufacturing investment in 1979 and the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 26 February 1992]: The levels of manufacturing investment in 1979 and 1989, the latest year for which data are available, are set out in the table.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Students (Concessionary Fares)

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will re-introduce travel grants for students;

(2) if, when he next meets the chairman of London Underground, he will raise the issue of concessionary fares for students.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Under the Education (Mandatory Awards) Regulations, students who are disabled, who are attending a place away from their main college as part of a medical, dental or nursing course or who are attending an institution outside the United Kingdom as part of their course may have their travel costs reimbursed. The first part of any expenditure is disregarded in deciding claims. We have no plans to change these arrangements nor would we wish to raise the issue of concessionary fares for students with the chairman of London Underground.

London Docklands

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish his Department's expenditure in relation to projects aimed at regeneration and redevelopment in London docklands in each year from 1980-81 to 1990-91.

Mr. Eggar: Expenditure related to projects aimed at regeneration and redevelopment in London docklands is a matter for the Secretary of State for the Environment. This Department pays grant in respect of capital expenditure at voluntary-aided and grant-maintained schools. Records of such expenditure cannot easily be disaggregated to show spending only in the docklands area of the local education authorities concerned.

Pupil Statistics

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many pupils in each local education authority are educated in special schools outside their own local education authority area.

Mr. Fallon [holding answer 19 February 1992]: The table shows the numbers of pupils belonging to the area of each authority who in January 1991 were attending maintained special schools outside that authority's area.

TRANSPORT

Cash Limits

Mr. Bevan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what changes he proposes to his Department's non-voted cash limits for 1991-92.

Mr. Freeman: With the agreement of my right hon. and learned Friend the Chief Secretary, the cash limit DTp/LACAP—Department of Transport/local authorities capital—covering credit approvals issued by my Department will be increased from £269,081,000 to £272,081,000. This increase will be matched by a reduction in the cash limit on class VII, vote 2 from £237,614,000 to £234,614,000.

Midland Metro

Mr. Bevan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on line one of the Midland metro.

Mr. Freeman: I strongly support the concept of the Midland metro line one. On present information, the scheme appears to meet the criteria for grant under section 56 of the Transport Act 1968. A decision on whether the project will be eligible for grant must await firm figures for capital costs based on tenders. I understand that the West Midlands passenger transport executive will be seeking tenders later this year. Provided the scheme meets the grant criteria in the light of these figures and provided sufficient resources are available, I can see no present reason why a grant for the construction of the project should not be made available at the appropriate time. The Government have already provided resources of £1·5 million for development work on the project. I am today authorising a further £3 million for development and preparatory work in the forthcoming financial year.

Blackwall Tunnel

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will now keep, or request the Metropolitan police to maintain, a log of significant interruptions to free flow traffic conditions in and around the area of the Blackwall tunnel, and publish periodically the record of delays and their respective causes, together with any subsequent preventative action or investigation that is taken.

Mr. Freeman: Police controllers at the Blackwall tunnel keep a record of incidents. The Department's agents for the Blackwall tunnel also maintain an incident log. This ensures that information is readily available for those operating the system. Preventative action and investigation based on these logs and other information takes place as and when needed.

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will set out the respective duties, responsibilities and functions, including those for capital and other expenditures, of his Department, the London borough of Greenwich and the Metropolitan police for the Blackwall tunnel and its immediate approaches, together with a statement of the regular system of consultation and co-ordination between those officials most immediately concerned with its efficient management and maintenance.

Mr. Freeman: The Secretary of State for Transport is the highway authority for trunk roads in England, including the Blackwall tunnels. The London borough of Greenwich is the Department's agent for the tunnels and the southern approach roads. The London borough of Tower Hamlets is the Department's agent for the northern approach roads. The traffic control systems unit is the Department's agent for installing and maintaining electrical and communication equipment. The Metropolitan police are responsible for managing the traffic flows, reporting offences and attending incidents. There is efficient co-operation and co-ordination between these parties who regularly discuss all the issues associated with day-to-day management of this section of the trunk road network.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will set out schedules of expenditure relating to the annual maintenance and improvement, respectively, of the Blackwall tunnel and its immediate approaches which show the costs of recent and planned capital improvements, the annual costs of structural and highway maintenance, respectively, the estimated cost of police surveillance and contracts relating to the removal of vehicles, distinguishing between the liabilities of each public body concerned, and stating the actual or notional interest charges arising from major improvments, including that of the recently installed traffic control system.

Mr. Freeman: Through its agents the London borough of Greenwich and the traffic control systems unit, the Department has spent £5·5 million over the past three years on maintenance and capital improvements for the Blackwall tunnels. In addition £21 million is being spent over five years on refurbishing the northbound tunnel. The east London traffic control system was equipped by the Department at a cost of £3·4 million. I will write to the hon. member shortly with the more detailed information he has requested.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the function of the new central traffic control system for the Blackwall tunnel and its surrounding area, together with the functions it is capable of performing additional to those of the system that it replaces, and the future functions that it could perform without significant further capital expenditure.

Mr. Freeman: The new east London traffic control system provides for the operation of tidal flow in the Blackwall tunnels, emergency tunnel closures, and the operation of signals on the tunnel approaches. It is easier to operate, maintain and repair than the old system, and provides additionally for the detection of incidents, queues or slow moving traffic. The system is capable of controlling traffic management on all major roads and tunnels in the east London area with additional expenditure only on roadside equipment.

London Docklands

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish (a) total expenditure on the docklands light railway, (b) total expenditure on all other new rail and bus transport projects directly related to docklands regeneration, (c) total expenditure on all road developments and improvements and (d) any other expenditure by his Department to assist in London docklands regeneration showing revenue and capital separately for each year from 1981-82 to 1991-92 (estimated) and plans for 1992-93 to 1994-95.

Mr. Freeman: Expenditure on the docklands light railway is:

£ million

It is not possible to distinguish expenditure on docklands by London Buses Ltd. and London Underground Limited's core business from their expenditure on other parts of London. The table gives investment on the Jubilee line extension:

British Rail plans to spend £20 million refurbishing Stratford by 1996 when the docklands light railway and Jubilee line extensions are expected to be open.

The following schemes in the national road programme which serve the London docklands area have been completed or are expected to be under construction by 1994-95.

The Thames RiverBus service received a £500,000 grant in 1989-90 to promote and improve the service in recognition of its road decongestion and docklands regeneration benefits.

Supplementary credit approvals totalling £200,000 were given in February to the London borough of Newham in respect of bus priority schemes. Further resources are being held for possible allocation to Tower Hamlets when details are provided of their firm proposals.

Subsidies

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish the total of revenue subsidy given to (a) London Underground, (b) London Buses, (c) Network SouthEast and (d) British Rail in each year from 1980-81 to 1994-95 (estimated), showing the financing sources for such subsidy in each year.

Mr. Freeman: Government grant is not paid separately to London Underground and London Buses. London Transport makes a claim for block grant each year on the basis of the external financing limit announced in the previous year's autumn statement. It is not possible, in advance of the claim, to apportion the grant for future years between revenue and capital. Over the next three years, Government grant to LT will be about £3·7 billion.

Subsidy is paid by the Government to the British Railways Board in the form of the public service obligation grant under EC regulation 1191/69 and section 3 of the Railways Act 1974, which compensates BR for maintaining loss-making passenger services. Grant is paid as a total to the board and the Government do not formally allocate it between sectors or geographical areas. However, estimates on the split for future grant allocations are now produced by the Department of Transport. Previous figures for NSE have been produced by BR in its document "Network Factfile 1991". The table shows BR's and NSE's PSO grant and LT revenue grant.

Liverpool-London Air Service

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport is he will ensure that the landing slots made available in London through the withdrawal of British Midland Airways of its Liverpool-London service are allocated only to an airline providing a similar service.

Mr. McLoughlin: No. An airline is free to decide how to use the take-off and landing slots that it holds. It is a matter for British Midland's commercial judgment whether to use the slots on another route, or to return them to the airport co-ordinator for re-allocation.

Coaches

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will meet representatives of London local authorities to raise the issue of improving coach parking facilities.

Mr. Freeman: I have already chaired a working group considering initiatives to improve tourist coach parking facilities for the 1992 season. Representatives from London boroughs have been members of this group. I am also chairing meetings with London Transport and some of the central London boroughs most affected by coach traffic to discuss coach terminal and off-street parking facilities. I hope that an announcement can be made shortly about measures to improve coach parking facilities in central London.

Thames River Bus

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what conditions for public funding for the Thames Riverbus service were set with respect to requirements for information to be available to help visitors at landing stages.

Mr. Freeman: None; but at the piers at which their vessels call, Riverbus provides a real-time passenger information system giving the expected time of arrival of the next service which is updated at minute intervals based on the position of vessels. Leaflets, posters and timetables are also provided.

PRIME MINISTER

South Africa

Mr. Cabora: To ask the Prime Minister if he raised at the meeting with Mr. De Klerk on 1 February, the proposition of giving the white electorate a veto on any agreement reached at the Conference for Democratic South Africa or otherwise over the negotiating process.

The Prime Minister: For President de Klerk to continue with his reforms, he has to have the support of the whole electorate. I discussed these reforms with President de Klerk on 1 February. I believe that the path of reform on which South Africa has embarked under President de Klerk's leadership is the only course which will allow her reintegration into the international community and enable her to attract the investment she needs for economic growth. That economic growth is in the interest of all South Africans.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Parole

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether a prisoner's continued denial of his or her guilt is a factor taken into account in deciding whether or not to accept a recommendation by the Parole Board to grant parole.

Mrs. Rumbold: When my right hon. Friend considers Parole Board recommendations to release prisoners, his principal concern is the risk involved. Denial of guilt per se does not dictate the outcome of the decision.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many recommendations of the Parole Board in each year since 1986 were (a) accepted, and (b) rejected in England and Wales.

Mrs. Rumbold: The information requested is given in the table.

Recommendations[1] for the release of prisoners on parole or licence by the Parole Board: by the outcome of recommendation 1986-90

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many parole decisions were referred by the Parole Board to him in each year since 1986 in England and Wales.

Mrs. Rumbold: The information requested is given in the table. Under the provisions of section 60(1) of the Criminal Justice Act 1967 only recommendations for release on parole are referred to the Secretary of State by the Parole Board.

Recommendations for the release of determinate sentence prisoners on parole by the Parole Board: 1986-1990

Local Government Finance

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce regulations to require magistrates to use the power to remit the community charge in full or in part for those people who cannot pay as determined by the means inquiry at committal stage.

Mr. John Patten: No.

Dangerous Dogs

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions have been made under the Dangerous Dogs Act 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Criminal statistics are compiled annually. None are yet available in respect of prosecutions under the Dangerous Dogs Act 1991 which came into force on 12 August last year.

Immigration

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what changes he proposes to make to entry qualifications for settlement from Pakistan after April; whether he will still accept applications for settlement on the basis of marriage from that date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary has no plans to make any changes in the immigration rules relating to the admission of Pakistani nationals.

Election Expenses

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he now expects to publish and bring into force an order on the variation of limits of candidates' election expenses.

Mrs. Rumbold: The draft Representation of the People (Variation of limits of Candidates' Elections Expenses) Order 1992 was laid before Parliament on Friday 21 February, and will come into force following approval by both Houses. It will increase the permitted levels of candidates' expenses at parliamentary elections throughout the United Kingdom, and at local elections in Great Britain.

ENVIRONMENT

Local Government Finance

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the statutory provisions relating to the levying by local authorities of a poll tax non-payment surcharge; and what is the total national cost of the non-payment surcharges levied by local authorities in England and Wales for 1991-92.

Mr. Key: To comply with section 32 of the Local Government Finance Act 1988, an authority must make adequate allowance for estimated non-collection when setting its charges.

Before the £140 general reduction, local authorities had made provision for £600 million for non-collection in 1991-92 when setting their charges.

Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the total of local government (a) revenue and (b) capital expenditure by local government within each region, showing Greater London separately, for each year from 1978-79 to 1991-92 (estimated).

Mr. Key: The available information is as follows:

[1] Total expenditure figures are given for 1981-82 to 1989-90. Net revenue expenditure figures are given for 1990-91 and 1991-92. Although both are net of specific and supplementary grants, direct comparisons cannot be made as they derive from two different systems.
[2] Revised estimate.
[3] Budget.
[4] 1986-87 includes amounts charged direct to revenue or other funds and not capitalised, which are excluded in later years. Figures for 1990-91 and 1991-92 are not strictly comparable to earlier years owing to the introduction of the new capital finance system from 1 April 1990. Polytechnics were transferred out of local government from 1 April 1989.
[5] Provisional outturn.
[6] Local authority forecast.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much money was paid to local authorities to cover the cost of the £140 reduction for poll tax bills.

Mr. Portillo: The sum of £4·374 billion of grant is being paid in 1991-92 under the Community Charges (General Reduction) Act 1991. The sum of £4·346 billion of this had already been paid in respect of charge income forgone, and represents 90 per cent. of the amount due, based on local authorities' own initial estimates of charge income to be collected for the year. Further payments are to be made, with effect from 1992-93, to bring the total amount paid into line with the total income forgone on charges actually collected for the year. In addition, I estimate the £28 million will have been paid by the end of the financial year to reimburse authorities for rebilling and other administrative costs directly resulting from the Act.

Council House Building

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many local authority permanent dwellings were started in Great Britain in each year since 1979.

Mr. Yeo: The latest information for 1980 and 1990 is published in table 6.1 of "Housing and Construction Statistics: Great Britain: 1980-1990". Figures for 1979 appear in the 1979-1989 edition of the same publication. Provisional figures for 1991 were released in a departmental information bulletin (No. 87) on 5 February 1992—local authorities account for virtually all the starts by local authorities, new towns and Government Departments in 1991. Copies are in the Library.

Recycling

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assistance he has provided for the development of paper, plastics and glass recycling plants in the United Kingdom; and if he has any plans to develop additional recycling plants.

Mr. Baldry: Our preferred approach is for industry to come up with recycling initiatives that will stand the test of time in a free market. The Government's role is to provide the appropriate legal and economic framework to encourage recycling.

The legal framework is set out in the Environmental Protection Act 1990, certain provisions of which are designed to make recycling more attractive. The Department of Trade and Industry and the Department of the Environment have also commissioned a study of economic instruments having the potential to encourage higher recycling rates.

Industry can seek funding for research and development through the environmental technology innovation scheme—ETIS—operated jointly by my Department and the Department of Trade and Industry, and the DEMOS —the Department of Trade and Industry's environmental management option scheme—and Euroenviron schemes, administered by the Department of Trade and Industry.

Recent ETIS grants include £100,500 to British Glass and £835,100 to Anaplast Ltd. to support research into new methods of recycling waste glass and plastic respectively; under the DEMOS scheme, a grant of £283,000 was awarded to Drinkwater Saby Ltd. as part of a collaborative project involving the collection of recyclable household waste and its sorting into marketable fractions; and a grant of £700,000 under the Euroenviron scheme was given to a collaborative project, including a United Kingdom firm, Rosehill Polymers, which aims to research ways in which waste tyres and plastic bottles can be recycled into marketable higher grade products.

Unified Business Rate

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the entitlement to hardship relief for the unified business rate; and in what ways its availability is made known to businesses.

Mr. Key: Section 49 of the Local Government Finance Act 1988 gives a charging authority discretion to reduce or remit the payment of non-domestic rates. But an authority may not give relief unless it is satisfied that the ratepayer would otherwise sustain hardship and it is reasonable to do so having regard to the interests of its community charge payers. Guidance has been issued to all authorities but it is for them to consider the merits of each case and how the availability of relief should be made known to businesses. Seventy-five per cent. of the cost of any relief granted will be borne centrally by the non-domestic rates pool with the remainder being met locally by charge payers.

Redmire to Redcar Rail Link

Mr. Snape: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consultations he has had about the environmental impact of the possible closure of the Redmire to Redcar rail link; and what assessment he has made of the extent to which the transfer of traffic from rail to road is in accordance with his Department's environmental objectives.

Mr. Yeo: None. As my hon. Friend the Minister for Public Transport said in answer to the hon. Member today, British Steel has agreed to continue transporting limestone on the Redmire line until the end of September, and officials from his Department are to host discussions to explore the scope for keeping the limestone traffic on the line in the longer term.

Planning Authorities (Development Policy)

Mr. Walden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to encourage local planning authorities to make known a clear presumption against development in areas unsuitable for development, in order to deter repeated applications.

Mr. Yeo: Guidance on the preparation of development plans in PPG12, published on 10 February 1992, emphasises that such plans provide the framework for sound and effective development control. While they must make adequate provision for development, full account must also be taken of the need to protect the built and natural environments. Planning applications must be determined in accordance with the development plan unless material considerations indicate otherwise. An applicant who proposes development which is clearly in conflict with the development plan would need to produce convincing reasons to demonstrate why the plan should not prevail.

Development plans will therefore give much greater certainty about what development will and will not be acceptable in particular locations. Coupled with local planning authorities' power, under section 17 of the Planning and Compensation Act 1991, to turn away certain categories of repetitive planning applications, the new development plan system should reduce considerably the incidence of repeated applications.

London Docklands

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish (a) the total grant paid to the London Docklands development corporation (b) expenditure by his Department outside the LDDC area but directly related to docklands redevelopment in east London and (c) other expenditure by his Department on regeneration within the LDDC area showing revenue and capital separately for each year from 1981-82 to 1991-92 (estimated) and plans for 1992-93 to 1994-95.

Mr. Portillo: (a) Total grant paid to the London Docklands development corporation (LDDC) from 1981-82 to 1991-92 is:

	Revenue £ million	Capital £ million (rounded)
1981-82	2	28
1982-83	8	33
1983-84	9	54
1984-85	11	48
1985-86	11	43
1986-87	12	53
1987-88	12	71
1988-89	18	98
1989-90	20	236
1990-91	22	311
[1]1991-92	22	227

[1] Estimated.

The provisional allocation for 1992-93 is £21 million (revenue) and £81 million (capital).

Levels of grant for 1993-94 and 1994-95 have not be determined.

(b) My Department's inner-city programmes support various regeneration activities. Although it is not possible to quantify the value of schemes relating directly to docklands redevelopment, inner-city expenditure (capital and revenue) in the boroughs of Newham, Southwark and Tower Hamlets, is:

	£ million (rounded)
1981-82	2
1982-83	1
1983-84	3
1984-85	5
1985-86	4
1986-87	7
1987-88	8
1988-89	8
1989-90	9
1990-91	9
[1]1991-92	13

[1] Estimated.

The allocation for 1992-93 has not yet been finalised, and grant levels for 1993-94 and 1994-95 have not been determined.

(c) I will write to the hon. Member with this information.

Shelters, London

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give details of new provision of shelters and other accommodation for the roofless in Greater London in 1990, 1991, 1992, including the numbers of places made available at each location.

Mr. Yeo: Between 1990 and 1992 my Department has provided 489 places in 19 hostels and 779 places in winter shelters in Greater London under the rough sleepers initiative. We have also provided bedspaces in permanent independent accommodation for rough sleepers to move on to. A list of the places made available in 1990, 1991 and so far in 1992 states:

Homeless Statistics

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the total numbers of homeless individuals in (a) England, (b) Greater London, (c) outer London and (d) inner London in each year from 1980-81 to 1991-92.

Mr. Yeo: The available information is on the numbers of households for whom local authorities accepted responsibility for securing permanent accommodation under the homelessness provisions of the Housing (Homeless Persons) Act 1977 and the Housing Act 1985. Estimates of the total number of persons in these households are not available centrally.

[1] Inner London comprises City of London, Camden, Hackney, Hammersmith and Fulham, Haringey, Islington, Kensington and Chelsea, Lambeth, Lewisham, Newham, Southwark, Tower Hamlets, Wandsworth and Westminster.
[2] First 3 quarters only

A new reporting system was introduced for the non-metropolitan districts from the fourth quarter 1980 and for London and other metropolitan authorities from the third quarter 1982 and figures for 1980 to 1982 are not strictly comparable with those for later periods. From the second quarter 1991 the definition of acceptance was altered to exclude intentionally homeless and all earlier figures have been adjusted to the new basis.

Gravel

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what forecasts for gravel demand have been made by his Department for the next five, 10 and 20 years; and what steps are being taken to seek substitutes which would have less environmental impact than gravel extraction.

Sir George Young: Independent forecasts of the long-term national demand for primary aggregates, which include gravel, were published for consultation by the Department in May 1991. These covered the 20-year period to 2011 and showed projected annual demand in England and Wales could reach between 421 metric tonnes and 490 metric tonnes by that time. The Government have a comprehensive programme of research projects examining alternative sources of supply of aggregates. This includes marine dredged aggregates and coastal superquarries. The Government are also committed to increasing the use of waste and recycled materials. Research into the scope for using these as aggregates was published by the Department in July 1991. The research suggested various ways to stimulate increased usage. These are being progressed at present.

Leigh Barton

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment at the present level of four general craftsmen involved in repair work, when he expects the historic monument of Leigh Barton to be open to the general public; how much has been spent on restoration and renovation work since the monument was taken into public ownership in 1986; whether the funds are available to complete the necessary work; and if he will make a statement as to his policy on restoring historic monuments so that they can be safely open to the public.

Mr. Yeo: Since its acquisition in 1974, work to Leigh Barton has cost about £300,000. English Heritage expects to have to spend another £250,000 before the programme of work can be completed. It has not been possible for it to give the work the priority that it would wish because of other demands on its financial resources. The work is now expected to recommence in 1994-95 and continue into 1995-96, when English Heritage will review the future opening arrangements.

English Heritage is committed to putting its estate into good repair, maintaining it and managing it efficiently for the benefit of the nation. The properties in care cover a wide variety of England's historic buildings and monuments. In some instances it is appropriate for English Heritage to consider an alternative use for its properties, rather than maintain them solely for public access with a custodial presence. In the case of Leigh Barton, English Heritage is looking at a possible alternative use for the farmhouse which could generate an income and be compatible with some future public access.

RENAVAL

Sir Robin Maxwell-Hyslop: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to the statement on 17 February, Official Report, column 27, and the answer by the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, on 24 February , Official Report, column 380, when he will issue the necessary instructions to enable the RENAVAL programme in Plymouth to commence.

Sir George Young: The RENAVAL programme for the travel-to-work area of Plymouth was approved by the European Commission on 20 December 1900. The inaugural meeting of the programme co-ordinating committee was held on 21 March 1991. Some European regional development fund payments have already been authorised in respect of the programme.

UN Environment Programme

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will obtain for his departmental library a copy of the Coopers and Lybrand Deloitte report on the efficiency of the United Nations environment programme with regard to the United Kingdom's donations to UNEP.

Mr. Heseltine: My Department already has a copy of this report.

EC Funding

Mr. Enright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether those local authorities in areas eligible to receive European regional development fund assistance will enjoy an increase in their captial allocations to enable utilisation of European regional development fund allocations without a reduction in the proportion of supplementary credit allocation not available to match European regional development fund grant, but used to support housing, education, personal and social services and transport schemes.

Mr. Yeo: I refer the hon. Member to the statement made in the House on 17 February by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, in which he indicated that future public expenditure plans would show forecast ERDF receipts separately and this would demonstrate that public expenditure cover would be clearly available for such receipts. The detailed arrangements for this are still the subject of dicussion amongst the relevant Government Departments.

Rose Theatre

Mr. Irvine: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give further consideration to including the site of the Rose theatre remains in Southwark in his schedule of ancient monuments.

Mr. Yeo: I am pleased to announce that, following a joint request by CMD Property Developments Ltd. and BriTel Fund Trustees Ltd. and consultation with English Heritage, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has today included the site of the Rose theatre remains in his schedule of ancient monuments. Development of the Rose Court building which includes the provision of sufficient headroom over the remains to allow for their possible future display, is complete. Scheduling at this time will ensure that any proposals for works to the monument, including works in connection with its long term preservation and possible display, would be fully considered through the statutory scheduled monument consent procedures.

"This Common Inheritance"

Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has completed the consultation on the policy of banning or discouraging all uses of asbestos as set out in the Government's White Paper, "This Common Inheritance—The First Year Report"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: In September 1991 it was announced in the White Paper "This Common Inheritance—The First Year Report" that the Government were consulting on "a policy of banning or discouraging all uses of asbestos, expect for a number of existing uses were detailed risk assessment has shown that suitable substitutes are either not available or do not offer a materially better option in safety or other terms".

Subsequently, the European Commission announced that it would propose a draft directive, to ban remaining types of asbestos, with exemptions for some uses of chrysotile (white asbestos).

Consultations on the proposed policy and the expected directive have involved the Department of Trade and Industry, the Health and Safety Executive, the Department of the Environment's advisory committee on hazardous substances, the Confederation of British Industry and the asbestos industry. The consultation is now complete.

In negotiating the expected draft directive, the Government's policy will be that remaining uses of asbestos should be limited to essential cases where less hazardous substitutes are not yet available, based on assessment of risks and costs during production, use and disposal. The Government's aim is to see this policy introduced Community-wide, as part of their strategy to assess, and where possible reduce, the potential health and environmental impacts of hazardous substances.

The existing legislation, which prohibits the most dangerous types and uses of asbestos and controls work activities involving asbestos and disposal of asbestos, will remain. There will be no requirement to remove and dispose of asbestos materials already in place, such as in buildings (for example as insulation), in cars (for example, as brake pads) or in industrial situations (for example, as seals or gaskets). The Government advise that asbestos materials in poor condition should be removed, but that materials in good condition should remain in place. Further detailed advice is available in the Department of the Environment's booklet "Asbestos Materials in Buildings" which is available from HMSO.

Fuel and Power Industry Processes

Mr. Couchman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, when the remainder of the process guidance notes for the fuel and power industry processes prescribed under part I of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 will be available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier [pursuant to his reply, 4 February 1992, c. 137]: I am very pleased to report that we have today issued 26 more guidance notes covering almost all the remaining processes which are to be prescribed for local authority air pollution control under the Act from 1 April. These notes have been drawn up after consultation with relevant industries, local authorities and other interested bodies. They will provide a sound framework within which local authorities will be able to exercise their new air pollution control functions.

A set of notes will be placed in the Library of the House. The notes are also being sent to district and borough councils and to port health authorities.

These notes substantially complete the guidance for the processes prescribed for local authority control under part I of the Environmental Protection Act 1990. All the published notes will, however, be reviewed regularly, and additional or amended notes will be issued if and when the need arises.

Renewable Energy Sources

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to publish a policy planning guidance note for the development of renewable energy sources.

Mr. Yeo: A consultation paper inviting comments on a draft planning policy guidance note (PPG) on this topic was issued by my Department on 5 December. Separate but parallel consultation is being carried out by the Welsh Office. My right hon. Friends intend to publish this PPG later this year.

New Parliamentary Building

Mr. Cormack: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide a progress report on the design of the new parliamentary building; and what arrangements are being made to show the proposals to hon. Members.

Mr. Heseltine: I have kept in close touch with the development of the design of the new building, including making a number of visits to the offices of the architect Michael Hopkins and Partners to see the work at first hand. The design is making good progress, has received a favourable response from the Royal Fine Art Commission, and the informal consultations with Westminster city council and English Heritage are progressing well prior to making a submission for planning consent under DOE circular 18/84. The work is on target for completion of the final sketch design stage by Easter 1992 and I am confident that the design will develop to provide a building which, as the Services Committee said:

"should come to be regarded world wide as an example of the very finest late twentieth century British architecture".

My right hon. Friend the Leader of the House has announced that there will be a debate on the design proposals on Monday 9 March. I understand that, to enable right hon. and hon. Members to form their own view on the proposals, the Accommodation and Works Committee has arranged for the model of the building together with plans, perspectives and elevations to be exhibited in Westminster Hall for two weeks from 2 March. A brochure describing the scheme is also being sent to all right hon. and hon. Members.

EMPLOYMENT

Social Fund (Vocational Training)

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether unemployed claimants who are receiving unemployment benefit who participate in European social fund vocational training courses provided either by (a) voluntary organisations or local authorities, or (b) training and enterprise councils or local enterprise companies, are required to be available for and actively seeking employment.

Mr. Jackson: Questions on operational matters in the Employment Service executive agency are the responsibility of Mike Fogden, the agency's chief executive, to whom I have referred this question for reply.

Industrial Relations

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish a list of those who responded to the Green Paper, "Industrial Relations in the 1990s".

Mr. Forth: As with all previous Green Papers on this subject, the responses to "Industrial Relations in the 1990s" have been treated as confidential unless the organisations concerned have made their views public. This applies both to the content of particular representations and to the identification of their source. At the request of the hon. Member for Sedgefield, my Department has written to all those who responded to the latest Green Paper to ask if they would be willing to be identified.

Wages Council

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the current wages councils and the numbers of (a) workers and (b) establishments covered by each council.

Mr. Forth: The latest information available is given in the table:

Labour Statistics

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish the total number of employees in employment within (a) the south-east region, (b) Greater London, (c) outer London, (d) inner London and (e) each London borough in each year from 1980 to 1990.

Mr. Jackson: Information for areas smaller than the standard economic regions is only available from the censuses of employment for 1981, 1984, 1987 and 1989. The available information can be obtained from the NOMIS database in the Library.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish the total number of registered unemployed people there were in (a) the south-east region, (b) Greater London, (c) outer London, (d) inner London and (e) each London borough in each year from 1980 to 1990.

Mr. Jackson: The numbers of people claiming unemployment related benefits can be obtained from the NOMIS database in the Library.

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people are currently in work in (a) the east midlands and (b) Derbyshire; and how many people were in work in these areas in 1979.

Mr. Forth: Estimates for areas within standard regions are available only from the census of employment. The earliest and most recent estimates for the county on a comparable basis are for 1981 and 1989. These are given in the table together with estimates for the region in 1979, 1991 and the two census dates.

Trade Unions

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received about the Union of Construction, Allied Trades and Technicians' conduct of its affairs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Employment has received no such representations. However, deficiencies in the register of members of the Union of Construction, Allied Trades and Technicians have been widely reported. These include the listing of people who are not union members. The Government intend to introduce legislation to strengthen the rights of union members against electoral fraud arising from such deficiencies in trade union registers.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his answer of 25 February, Official Report, column 457, what representations he has received about the conduct of the elections for (a) officials and (b) other bodies of the former National Union of Seamen in 1984, 1985 and 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Employment has received no representations about any of the elections mentioned. Statutory requirements covering elections for members of trade unions' principal executive committees first came into effect in October 1985. The current requirements, together with the additional proposals in the Green Paper "Industrial Relations in the 1990s" (Cm. 1602), are intended to ensure that the basic right of union members to free and fair elections is effectively protected.

Small Businesses

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received calling for legislation to help alleviate the problems caused to small businesses by the slow payment of bills; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Employment and I have both received representations for legislation from individual small business owners and managers, trade and other associations and from hon. Members. Although I understand the frustrations felt by small businesses because of delayed payments I remain to be convinced that legislation would be effective. The majority of organisations representing small firms share the Government's view that the effect of a legislative approach would be, at best, minimal and could even be damaging to the small firms sector. I have made it known, however, that I would be interested to receive views on how an effective legislative framework might operate.

My Department will continue to address late payment through a strategy of persuasion and education and, in addition to a number of measures already in place. I am keeping the issue under close review.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Homelessness

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what discussions he has had with local authorities regarding the provision of hostels for the homeless to match the reduction of resettlement units; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: The management of the Ressettlement Agency and day-to-day negotiations with local authorities and voluntary bodies are matters for Mr. Tony Ward, the chief executive, although no unit is closed unless Ministers are satisfied with replacement proposals. He will write to my hon. Friend and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Claimants, Leeds

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will show for each year from 1987 to 1991 the number of people in the Leeds metropolitan district who claimed (a) family credit, (b) income support and (c) community charge benefit both (i) in total and (ii) by benefit office.

Miss Widdecombe: The administration of benefits is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people in the Leeds metropolitan district (a) applied for social fund, (i) community care grants, (ii) budgeting loans and (iii) crisis loans and (b) received community care grants, budgeting loans and crisis loans, shown (1) numerically and (2) in real cash terms every year from 1987 to 1991, shown both in totals and by benefit office.

Mr. Scott: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Income Support

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will obtain for his departmental library, a copy of the research undertaken by Sean Stitt of Newcastle polytechnic into the viability of income support; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: The Department received a copy of this last year. We are always interested in research which might bear upon the effectiveness of income support, although we would not accept the assumptions made in this report.

Pensions Uprating

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would have been the cost in each year to public funds at 1992 prices to have maintained since November 1980 the system by which statutory up-rating of pensions was required to increase by whichever was the higher of prices or earnings.

Miss Widdecombe: The annual cost to the national insurance fund (at 1991-92 prices at £ millions) of uprating basic retirement pensions each year by prices or earnings whichever was higher in each year starting in November 1980 for each financial year is given in the table:

Financial Year	Cost £ millions
1980-81	127
1981-82	552
1982-83	747
1983-84	833
1984-85	1,509
1985-86	1,679
1986-87	2,581
1987-88	3,769
1988-89	4,571
1989-90	5,430
1990-91	5,884
1991-92	6,271

There would be some offsetting savings in expenditure on income-related benefits.

The cost to the national insurance fund of these extra costs in 1991-92 would mean an increase of £8·70 per week in the combined national insurance contributions of a man on average earnings and his employer.

Expenditure

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what change there has been in social security spending since 1978-79; and what change is expected for the future.

Miss Widdecombe: Total expenditure on social security increased by 52 per cent. or £23 billion in real terms between 1978-79 and 1991-92. Between 1991-92 and 1994-95, expenditure is expected to grow by £6·4 billion at 1991-92 prices. Of the overall increase, 32 per cent. relates to expenditure on benefits for elderly people, 39 per cent. on benefits for long-term sick and disabled people, and 13 per cent. on benefits for lone parent families. The figures given above for past growth, and for the division on future growth between client groups correct those given in the DSS departmental report (Cm. 1914).

National Insurance Contributions

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a table showing for each year since 1970 the number of males and females paying national insurance contributions and the amount collected in contributions as a percentage of gross domestic product to one place of decimals together with (a) the number earning more than the upper earnings limit, the amount earned by such males and females, and their aggregate incomes as a percentage of the amount by those paying national insurance and (b) the amount earned above the upper earnings limit as a proportion of the amount earned below it.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 19 February 1992]: The information requested is in the tables:

[1] Source: 1 per cent. sample from Contributors and Contributions Statistics. Although some people pay a mixture of different types of contributions, each person is counted only once in the table. No figures are readily available for years prior to 1975 and are not yet available from 1989-90.

[2] All GDP data used are consistent with the Regional Accounts article published in Economic Trends November 1991. The contributions figures used in the calculations are the gross receipts for the NI fund which are set out in the NI fund accounts for each year.

(a) It is estimated that in 1991-92 on average 2·6 million men and 0·4 million women earn more than the upper earnings limit. Their earnings are estimated to be:

£ billion

Men	Women	Total
80	10	90

Their total earnings are expected to be about 34 per cent. of the earnings of all those who pay national insurance.

(b) It is estimated that the amount of all earnings above the upper earnings limit is about 11·5 per cent. of all the earnings below that limit.

Information for earlier years is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Domestic Rates

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what will be the level of relief for domestic rates in Northern Ireland in consequence of the application of the poll tax in Great Britain in the current year; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: The statutory rule which will give effect to the 1992-93 regional rate for Northern Ireland and to the reduction for domestic ratepayers will be laid before Parliament in early March, in accordance with the normal timetable.

Departmental Staff

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the total number of employees in his Department; and how many are (a) black and (b) disabled.

Dr. Mawhinney: On 30 November 1991 there were 29,860 people in the non-industrial grades of the Northern Ireland civil service and 213 members of the home civil service working in the Northern Ireland Office.

There were 1,284 staff in the Northern Ireland Civil Service (4·3 per cent. of the service) who self-reported a disability. Of these, 431 (1·4 per cent. of the service) were, or had been, registered as disabled. In addition, 35 registered disabled people were working in the Northern Ireland civil service under the sheltered placement scheme. There were no registered disabled staff in the Northern Ireland Office.

The Race Relations Act 1976 does not apply to Northern Ireland and the Northern Ireland civil service does not, therefore, monitor the ethnic origin of staff. The 109 London-based staff of the Northern Ireland Office have, however, been invited to take part in an ethnic monitoring survey and, of those who responded, 4 described themselves as belonging to an ethnic minority.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Mortgage Possession Orders

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Attorney-General, pursuant to his answer of 21 February, Official Report, columns 321-22, for what reason the number of mortgage possession orders made in Coventry court in 1991 exceeded the number of actions entered.

The Attorney-General: A greater number of orders made over actions entered is not necessarily an indication of error, since some of the orders will relate to actions entered during the previous year. However, the figures given in my answer to the hon. Member on 21 February were provisional and stated to be so. On checking the figures again, it has been established that the data given for orders made erroneously included rent actions. The figures have now been revised and the total number of actions entered and orders made, whilst still provisional, should now read 1,256 and 1,202 respectively.

Departmental Staff

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Attorney-General if he will publish a table showing the number of (a) men and (b) women (x) in his Department and (y) in the Lord Chancellor's Department in each of grades (i) 1, (ii) 2, (iii) 3, (iv) 4, (v) 5, (vi) 6, (vii) 7, (viii) SEO, (ix) HEO, (x) administrative trainee, (xi) EO, (xii) CO and (xiii) CA.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Attorney-General what is the total number of employees in (a) the Lord Chancellor's Department and (b) his Department; and how many are (i) black and (ii) disabled.

The Attorney-General: The total number of staff in (a) the Lord Chancellor's Department is 11,923. The total numbers of staff in my Departments (b) are:

Department	Numbers
Legal Secretariat to the Law Officers	23
Treasury Solicitor's Department	474
Crown Prosecution Service	5,758
Serious Fraud Office	129

In the Lord Chancellor's Department 8,674 staff responded to an ethnic origin survey, and of these 622 were black or belonged to other ethnic minorities. As at 1 June 1991 the Lord Chacellor's Department had 171 staff who are registered as disabled.

In the Legal Secretariat to the Law Officers there are no black or registered disabled staff. In the Treasury Solicitor's Department there are 80 staff who are black or belong to other ethnic minorities. The Treasury Solicitor's Department had four members of staff who are registered as disabled.

In the Crown prosecution service, 4,012 staff responded to an ethnic origin survey, and of these 248 were black or belonged to other ethnic minorities. As at 31 August 1991 the Crown prosecution service had 40 staff who are registered as disabled.

The Serious Fraud Office has 17 staff who are black or belong to other ethnic minorities, but no employees who are registered as disabled.

Stefan Kiszko

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Attorney-General why the results of the sperm test on Stefan Kiszko carried out by Dr. Edward Tierney were not disclosed to the defence at the time of his trial.

The Attorney-General: The sample of semen obtained by Dr. Tierney from Stefan Kiszko was submitted to the forensic science laboratory for examination. The Director of Public Prosecutions was provided with a witness statement made by the scientist concerned with the test and that statement was served as part of the committal document. The statement concluded withh an assertion that the maker had "found nothing else of evidential value"

and the Director of Public Prosecutions relied upon that assertion. So far as can be ascertained from the DPP's case file, no information was received by his staff to put them on notice that further material evidence was in fact available. The conduct of the original inquiry is currently under investigation by the Lancashire police.

SCOTLAND

Ambulance Services

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give, for the Scottish Ambulance Service, Greater Glasgow area, the success rate in percentage terms of achieving its ORCON standards for (a) reaction to a 999 call and (b) reaching the site.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The current rates of achievement for the Greater Glasgow area are:

Emergency calls	Percentage of calls
Activation time	83 per cent. of calls within three minutes
Reaching scene	81 per cent. of calls within 14 minutes

The target for such calls is 95 per cent. and I have asked the general manager of the Scottish Ambulance Service to review the situation. In addition I am making an extra £250,000 available to the ambulance service in Glasgow specifically to help improve the success rate in response times.

European Community Food Surpluses

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the procedures for distributing EC food surpluses to voluntary organisations in Scotland; and what action is being taken to ensure that such voluntary organisations are made fully aware of the availability of EC surplus food and are encouraged to assist in its distribution to those most in need.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: In reply to a question from the right hon. Member for Selby (Mr. Alison), my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food announced on 26 February, Official Report, column 507-8, the arrangements for operating the European Community surplus food scheme in the United Kingdom in 1992. Agriculture departments will shortly be inviting charitable and other non-profit making organisations wishing to take part to apply by 10 April for designation to distribute food. The details were set out in a joint agriculture departments press release. In addition to that publicity, the Scottish Office Agriculture and Fisheries Department will be writing to all bodies participating in the 1991 scheme or which have expressed an interest in the 1992 scheme.

Speech Therapy

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what level of resources have been allocated for speech therapy for children in Scotland with a formal statement of needs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 26 February 1992]: General responsibility for the speech therapy needs of children in Scotland rests with health boards. Financial provision is made within the overall moneys made available to support their programmes, but the element devoted to speech therapy provision is not separately identified.

Additionally, education authorities have a responsibility to provide for speech therapy which is identified as a special educational need in a record of needs. Under new arrangements, which will begin on 1 April 1992, education authorities will contract directly with health boards for the provision of this service. The sum of £2 million has been included in the 1992-93 local government settlement to take account of the additional expenditure authorities will incur.

WALES

Home Ownership Schemes

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many properties have been removed from the public sector via shared ownership schemes by each local authority in Wales in each year since 1988.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Since 1988, one dwelling has been sold to the private sector under section 143 of the Housing Act 1985. This occurred in Alyn and Deeside in 1990.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish the proportion of local authority revenue expenditure in Wales financed by (a) Government grant, (b) non-domestic rates and (c) local domestic taxation in each year from 1978-79 to 1990-91 and estimates for 1991-92 and 1992-93.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The information available is given in the table. Prior to 1981-82 there was no separate rate support grant system for Wales and so figures are not available.

Building Schemes

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many properties have been developed under (a) building for sale schemes and (b) building under licence schemes in each local authority area in Wales in each year since 1988.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Information on dwellings built by local authorities for sale is collected at the time of sale. Numbers of dwellings built under licence relate to those intended to be built at the time of disposal of land to the private developer and have been collected centrally only since the third quarter of 1990. Recorded activity since 1988 is given in the table:

	Building for sale				Building under licence

Health Service Staff

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the total number of people employed by the NHS in Wales on a full-time and part-time basis.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The latest available data, as at 30 September 1990 for medical and dental staff and 31 January 1992 for non-medical and dental staff, show that there were 72,146 staff employed by the NHS in Wales —including the Welsh Health Commons Services Authority but excluding staff in Gwent and South Glamorgan family health services authorities which are not on the payroll system for which this information is derived—this amounted to 117 staff as at 31 December 1991—the full and part time split is not held centrally. Of these 44,547 were full time and 27,599 were part time.

Welsh Language Teachers

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many Welsh language teachers there were in each county in the Welsh education system in the years 1987, 1988, 1989, 1990 and 1991.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Due to the organisation of the curriculum in primary schools, teachers of the Welsh language cannot be separately identified. The number of Welsh language teachers in secondary schools is available only from the 1989 secondary school staffing survey and relates to that year. The information is given in the table.

HEALTH

Dentists

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement explaining the circumstances in which dentists have been advised that their payments are to be reduced by 13 per cent.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals he has to vary the national health service fees paid to general dental practitioners; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The proposed increase in target net income of 8·5 per cent. which was recommended by the Doctors and Dentists Remuneration Review Body was accepted by the Government. To ensure that the level at which fees are pitched in the coming year will deliver this proposed increase in dentists' net income, the health departments consulted the British Dental Association (BDA). Because of evidence of overpayments resulting from this year's level of fees, which suggest that on average dentists would be paid far more than the intended target gross income, the Government suggested an interim fee reduction from 1 April. Following discussions with the BDA and the health departments agreement was reached to suspend the reduction in fees proposed for 1 April. The health departments and the BDA will also hold a joint enquiry to review the level of payments to dentists in 1991-92; simultaneously, they will begin a more fundamental review of the structure of dentists' remuneration.

Health Service Staff

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total number of people employed by the NHS in England on a full-time and part-time basis.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: At 30 September 1990, the latest date for which figures are held centrally, there were 585,300 full-time employees and 358,700 part-time employees.

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the increase of staff in district health authorities since April 1989.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Figures at April 1989 are not available. The increase between September 1989 and September 1990, the latest date for which figures are held centrally, was 900 whole-time equivalents (0·1 per cent.). Over the same period there was an overall decrease of 200 whole-time equivalents in the NHS.

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the cost of the campaign to recruit nurses in each of the last five years; and whether a similar campaign to recruit social service staff will be run.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The cost of the nurse recruitment campaigns in England in each of the last five years was:

1986-87	1,126,770
1987-88	832,494
1988-89	2,338,093
1989-90	4,183,780
1990-91	3,367,420

We have no plans for a campaign by the Department to recruit social service staff. It is for local authorities, as employers in the personal social services field, to take the lead in securing the provision of an adequate work force. We did however hold a seminar in March 1991 with the Association of Directors of Social Services and the local government management board on manpower planning and work force analysis issues. The Department is also funding a major programme of research on social services work force issues at the National Institute for Social Work.

Food Poisoning

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the number of cases notified to him for 1991 in each health region for (a) food poisoning in general, (b) salmonella, (c) salmonella enteritidis, (d) salmonella enteritidis phage 4, (e) salmonella typhimurium, (f) campylobacter and (g) listeriosis.

Mr. Dorrell: The information requested has been placed in the Library.

The data show notifications of food poisoning to the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys and laboratory reports of specific organisms to the Public Health Laboratory Service's communicable disease surveillance centre.

Drug Addiction

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his most recent estimate of totals of people in Great Britain who are addicted to drugs as a result of (a) the use of illegal drugs and (b) the use of medicinal products.

Mr. Dorrell: The Home Office maintains an addicts index which indicates the number of people notified by doctors as dependent on a range of drugs controlled under the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971. The number of new and existing drug addicts in Great Britain notified to the addicts index was 17,716 in 1990, the latest year for which figures are available.

Regional health authorities in England and health authorities in Wales and Scotland are now implementing a drug misuse database which will provide data on drug users starting a new episode of treatment at services in any six-month period. This will provide anonymised data on a wider range of drugs than the Home Office addicts index and will include information on the use of some medicinal products, such as benzodiazepines. Some regions now have this information available and it is hoped that information for Great Britain will be available next year.

Hospital Cleaning Services

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what national guidelines have been issued to district health authorities about quality of service expected from private contractors for cleaning services in hospitals; and when these guidelines were last reviewed.

Mr. Dorrell: The responsibility for specifying service requirements and quality standards for cleaning services in the NHS rests with the relevant local health authority. They are also responsible for monitoring performance to ensure the required quality standards are met.

Departmental Achievements

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the expenditure and achievements of his Department in North Yorkshire during 1991; and what was the comparable position between June 1979 and May 1980.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 11 February 1992]: For the financial year 1979-80, the annual accounts of the North Yorkshire area health authority show total revenue expenditure of £60·4 million (cash) and capital expenditure attributable to the authority amounted to £2·8 million (cash).

In 1990-91, the annual accounts of the four successor district health authorities show total revenue expenditure of £165·8 million (cash), with capital expenditure totalling £16·7 million (cash).

These figures represent real-terms increases (measured at 1991-92 prices) of 26·3 per cent. for revenue expenditure and 173·3 per cent. for capital expenditure.

Between 1979 and 1990-91 in York health authority the number of patients treated is shown in the table:

York Health District

	[1]1979	[1]1980	[2]1990-91	Percentage change 1979 to 1990-91	Percentage change 1980 to 1990-91

Private Health Insurance

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will state for each year since 1978 the percentage of the population covered by private health insurance.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 27 February 1992]: The information is given in the table.

Year	Persons Insured/ millionss	UK Population/ millions	Percentage insured
1978	2·4	56·2	4·3
1979	2·7	56·2	4·8

[1]The basis of collection was changed from 1984. Figures to 1984 are for the three main provident insurers. Figures from 1985 onward include all companies.
[2]In 1988, 900,000 people covered by the Post Office and Civil Service Sanatorium Society, were included for the first time.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Departmental Staff

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the total number of employees in his Ministry; and how many are (a) black and (b) disabled.

Mr. Curry: Figures taken from a survey covering 92·2 per cent. of our 10,048 non-industrial work force, with part-timers counting as one, show 416 staff to be of ethnic minority origin. The Department employs 141½ staff who are registered as disabled. This figure covers both non-industrial and industrial grades but does not include staff with disabilities who have chosen not to register and counts part-time staff as half units.

EC Grant Aid

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the total amount of EC grant aid that has been given to the salmon industry in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) the remainder of the EC since 1973.

Mr. Curry: EC grant aid to the salmon industry in the United Kingdom since 1973 has totalled over £13·6 million. Figures for Community aid granted specifically to the salmon industry in the rest of the EC are not available.

Less-favoured Areas

Mr. Amos: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the total level of present and planned spending on each of the schemes available to farmers in the less-favoured areas for capital, environmental and other grant aid; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: The forecast outturn of expenditure by the Ministry in 1991-92 on payments to farmers in the less-favoured areas (LFAs) in England on capital, environmental and other grant schemes is set out in the following table. The table also sets out estimates of the sums likely to be spent under those schemes in the LFAs in the years 1992-93 to 1994-95. Except in the case of environmentally sensitive areas (ESAs) these estimates have been arrived at by applying the latest information on spend in the LFAs to the planning totals for future years. The planning totals do not hypothecate expenditure between particular parts of the country, nor in the case of capital grant, between particular types of investment. As regards ESAs, as the hon. Member will be aware, an expansion of the scheme is in train. It is not possible therefore to apply historic data to planning totals to produce estimates of future spend in the LFAs. For forward years, therefore, figures for planned expenditure on the scheme as a whole are given.

£ million

Scheme	1991-92[1]	1992-93[2]	1993-94[2]	1994-95[2]
F and CGS	5·3	5·4	5·8	6·1

Notes:

[1] Estimated Outturn.

[2] Estimated expenditure based on planning totals.

[3] Statistics for the farm diversification grant scheme figures do not distinguish between LFA and non-LFA. The figures given are for total expenditure in MAFF Divisions covering LFA areas.

Mr. Amos: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much assistance has been given to farmers in the less-favoured areas in Northumberland in 1979, 1987 and the latest year for which figures are available, under each of the hill livestock compensatory allowance, suckler cow and other schemes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: Information for the area requested is available only for the hill livestock compensatory allowances scheme:

	£ million
1979	2·288
1987	4·669
1991	6·008

Mr. Amos: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the current level of hill livestock compensatory allowance and suckler cow premium payments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: I refer my hon. Friend to the replies given to my right hon. Friend the Member for Westmorland and Lonsdale (Mr. Jopling) and my hon. Friend the Member for Harborough (Sir J. Farr) on 11 February 1992, Official Report, column 496-98.

ENERGY

Electricity Cables

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will estimate the cost of placing electricity cables underground compared with pylons; and what measures he is taking to encourage more electricity cables to be laid below ground.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The cost of placing electricity cables underground compared with overhead lines is a matter for the National Grid Company and the regional electricity companies, but for high voltage lines is approximately between nine and 10 times more expensive. All new overhead lines require a consent under section 37 of the Electricity Act 1989 and, in considering applications, the Secretary of State must have regard to the preservation of amenity.

Environmental Assessments

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on his policy on making environmental assessments for proposed energy policies, programmes and projects.

Mr. Wakeham: My ministerial colleagues and I give full weight to environmental factors when considering such proposals. In preparing their advice on proposals my officials take account, where appropriate, of the guidance set out in the Department of the Environment's guide on "Policy Appraisal and the Environment". The Department's report on the Government's expenditure plans within the energy sector 1992-93 to 1994-95 included an account of the environmental aspects of the Department's activities. The departmental objectives as set out in that report have recently been extended to make clear our intention of seeking to ensure that environmental aspects are properly recognised in all areas of the Department's work.

THORP

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if, pursuant to the oral answer to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen), Official Report, 24 February, column 674, on the thermal oxide reprocessing plant, he will set out (a) the proportion of the 30 tonnes of plutonium estimated to be recovered from reprocessing at THORP by the year 2000 that will arise from imported foreign spent fuel, (b) what safeguards will apply to the recovered plutonium and who will pay for the safeguards and (c) what arrangements exist for the return of the plutonium to the country of origin in terms of technical capability and treaty agreements.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: British Nuclear Fuels plc (BNFL) estimates that, by the year 2000, some 80 per cent. of the plutonium recovered during reprocessing in THORP will arise from spent fuel owned by overseas customers. This plutonium will be subject to Eurotom safeguards and to the terms of the appropriate safeguards agreements signed by the United Kingdom and the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA). The recovery of BNFL's costs arising from safeguards on its facilities is a commercial matter for the company. Costs of inspection and related activities are met by Eurotom and the IAEA.

Plutonium arising from reprocessing in THORP is transferred overseas only subject to the application of safeguards and on receipt of assurances covering peaceful use, physical protection and controls on re-transfer.

IAEA

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what proposals to strengthen international nuclear safeguards have been submitted by the United Kingdom's ambassador to the board of governors of the International Atomic Energy Agency for the agency's high level review of safeguards which began on 24 February.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The United Kingdom is a party to the proposals by the twelve EC member states for strengthening IAEA safeguards. These proposals were included in a statement made by the Netherlands on behalf of the EC and its member states to the general conference of the IAEA in September 1991: a copy of the statement has been placed in the Library of the House. The proposals are being fully explored in the board of governors of the IAEA.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the reason Her Majesty's Government has not paid in full the Kingdom's 1992 contribution to the International Atomic Energy Agency.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: In accordance with normal Government practice, the United Kingdom's 1992 contribution to the International Atomic Energy Agency will be paid at the beginning of the United Kingdom's next financial year.

Consultants

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list those parts of his Department, including executive agencies, carrying out reviews over the last 12 months into the pay and grading of staff and the firm of consultants engaged, where appropriate.

Mr. Wakeham: No reviews into the pay and grading of staff in my Department have been carried out in the past 12 months.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Nagorno Karabakh

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has made to the Armenian and Azerbaijani Governments about the situation in Nagorno Karabakh; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The British Government are playing a full part in encouraging the international community to promote a peaceful settlement. We will continue to urge all involved in the dispute to settle this matter in accordance with international law and with full respect for human rights and conference on security and co-operation in Europe—CSCE—principles. However, the roots of the dispute in Nagorno Karabakh are deep and a lasting peace will not be achieved easily.

We have raised with our European Community, North Atlantic Treaty Organisation and CSCE partners our concern at the deteriorating situation. The Portuguese ambassador in Moscow, acting on behalf of the Twelve European Community Governments, made a demarche on 20 January to the representatives in Moscow of Armenia and Azerbaijan and to the Russian Foreign Ministry calling on all concerned to work towards a peaceful settlement of this dispute.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs reiterated this point in a recent telephone conversation with the Armenian Foreign Minister, Mr. Hovanissian, and in Moscow last month he used the opportunity of his meeting with the Russian Foreign Minister to encourage the Russians to do what they could to help find a solution to the dispute.

In response to a British proposal, the CSCE Council of Ministers agreed on 31 January to send a mission to Armenia and Azerbaijan, including Nagorno Karabakh, to report on the situation. The team, which included a British representative, visited the region from 12 to 18 February. Its report and recommendations are being considered by the CSCE's committee of senior officials in Prague. CSCE countries will then consider how to carry the process forward using CSCE mechanisms.

We welcome the agreement to call for a ceasefire and to set up working groups which was announced after the trilateral meeting with representatives of Armenia and Azerbaijan convened by the Russian Foreign Minister on 20 February. However, since then there have been further reports of casualties in clashes in Nagorno Karabakh. There is a clear risk of a further deterioration in the situation. It is therefore important that the agreement reached in Moscow be backed up by immediate concrete action to prevent further tragic deaths.

Embassy Cars

Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list British embassies that previously qualified for a Rolls-Royce ambassadorial car, but now no longer do so; and if he will list the replacement vehicles.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The table lists posts which, in 1984, qualified for a Rolls-Royce ambassadorial car and which no longer do so.

Replacement Car	Post
To be decided (Rolls-Royce provided in 1990)	Canberra
Range Rover	Moscow
Lincoln Town Car	New York (UN)

Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will indicate the type, cost and specification of the next official car for Her Majesty's ambassador to the United Nations.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: A standard specification Lincoln town car to be leased at an annual cost of US $5,900—about £3,410 at the current exchange rate—including maintenance and insurance.

Eastern Europe

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will set out the new organisational structure within his Department for dealing with Eastern Europe and the area covered by the former Soviet Union.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Relations with Poland, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Bulgaria, Romania, Yugoslavia, Croatia, Slovenia and Albania are handled by the central European department. Relations with the States formerly in the Soviet Union are handled by the eastern department. Both departments have been reinforced to take account of changes within these areas. The joint assistance unit was created in 1989 to administer the know-how fund, and has been increased over the past year to deal with important additional work in the former Soviet Union.

Hong Kong (Ivory)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current number of possession licences issued to holders of ivory stocks in Hong Kong.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: As at 26 February 1992, there were 963 possession licences held by commercial stockholders in Hong Kong.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give details of items from endangered species seized by the Hong Kong authorities in 1991 and the prosecution arising from such seizures.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In 1991, the Hong Kong authorities seized a variety of specimens of endangered species from which 109 prosecutions arose.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if any exports of ivory from Hong Kong have been authorised since 17 October 1990.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: No commercial exports of ivory have been authorised by the Hong Kong authorities between 17 October 1990 and 25 February 1992 except for two pre-convention specimens of worked ivory of 0·1 kg each.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give details of ivory exported from Hong Kong during 1991.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: No commercial exports of ivory have been authorised by the Hong Kong authorities in 1991 except for one pre-convention specimen of 0·1 kg.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current quantity of all ivory known to be held in Hong Kong; and on what date it was last assessed.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The total commercial ivory stock held in Hong Kong on 17 July 1990 was 463 tonnes to the nearest tonne. No commercial exports of ivory have been authorised between then and 25 February 1992 except for two pre-convention specimens of worked ivory of 0·1 kg each.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many spot checks were made by the Hong Kong authorities of ivory-holding premises (a) since 19 October 1990 and (b) during 1991; and if any irregularities were discovered.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Hong Kong authorities have made 354 spot checks on ivory holding premises between 17 October 1990 and 25 February 1992 of which 220 were conducted during 1991. No irregularities were discovered.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give details of ivory exported from Hong Kong since 25 March 1991.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: No commercial exports of ivory have been authorised by the Hong Kong authorities in 1991 except for one pre-convention specimen of 0·1 kg.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give details of any ivory confiscated by the Hong Kong authorities since (a) 17 October 1990 and (b) 31 January 1991; and if any prosecutions for illegal export have been entered since each of those dates.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Between 17 October 1990 and 25 February 1992, the Hong Kong authorities confiscated 181·36 kg of ivory. Between 31 January 1991 and 25 February 1992 they confiscated 162·30 kg of ivory. During the first period, two prosecutions for illegal export were entered and during the second period, one such prosecution was entered.

Nuclear Waste, Russia

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he intends to make to the Russian Federation on the dumping of nuclear waste, from the Soviet fleet berthed at Murmansk, off the island of Novaya Zemlya.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Government are concerned about environmental issues related to nuclear waste, and the operation and safety of nuclear plant in Russia. We have had discussions with the Russian Government already on these matters; and will ensure that our concerns about these recent reports are made clear to the Russian authorities.

Council of Ministers

Mr. Beaumont-Dark: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish in the Official Report a statement of forthcoming business in the European Community's Council of Ministers.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The Foreign Affairs Council will meet on 2 March. The Council may review the European economic area agreement in the light of the Commission's request to the European Court of Justice for a second opinion on the compatibility of the revised draft agreement with the the treaty of Rome. The Council will consider relations with the former Soviet Union and will discuss the progress of negotiations in the GATT—general agreement on tariffs and trade—Uruguay round. The Commission's proposals for the future financing of the Community may also be considered. The Council may also discuss the investment services directive, the large exposure directive and the capital adequacy directive. The Council will also discuss the draft seventh VAT directive on the sale of second-hand goods, works of art, antiques and collectors' items, and the draft directives for the harmonisation of excise duty structures on tobacco and mineral oil products.

Ministers are also likely to discuss directives on air pollution caused by ground level ozone, minimum standards for keeping animals in zoos, the reduction and elimination of pollution caused by waste from the titanium oxide industry, and the United Nations conference on environmental development. If it is published in time, Ministers may also discuss the fifth environmental action programme.

The Transport Council will meet on 26 and 27 March. Ministers' discussion will concentrate on liberalisation issues including: road haulage cabotage, passenger transport cabotage, maritime cabotage and the third aviation package. TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Overseas Investment

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will list the major investment projects attracted from overseas to the northern region since (a) 1979, (b) 1983 and (c) 1987, together with the capital costs of each project and the amount of grant offered.

Mr. Leigh: Details of major investments known to have located in the northern region since 1979 are listed. Internal Market Council

Mr. Moate: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Internal Market Council held in Brussels on 25 February.

Mr. Leigh: I attended the Internal Market Council on 25 February.

The Council quickly reached agreement on a decision to set up a programme of research in the important area of security of information held in electronic form, ie on computers.

Following delivery of the European Parliament's opinion, the Council also agreed a common position on the third non-life insurance directive. This directive allows insurers access to European Community markets on the basis of a home state authorisation, and opens up opportunities for the United Kingdom insurance industry.

There was a lengthy discussion of the Commission proposals to control trade in cultural goods. Greece, Spain and Italy argued that the proposals should be widened in scope, and are clearly concerned that the removal of border controls will make it easier to transfer nationally important works of art out of their countries of origin. Germany, the United Kingdom, the Netherlands and Denmark all argued to the contrary, that the scope of the proposals should be more narrowly focused to avoid undue interference in the healthy and legitimate international art market.

The Commission introduced a discussion on border controls within the Community. In discussion, all member states agreed on the need for further work to enable controls on goods to be removed. The Council also discussed the effect that the removal of border controls will have on firms of independent customs agents, but reached no conclusion.

Finally, the Commission gave a short presentation on trans-European networks, which cover energy, transport and communications. There was no discussion of this item.

Vehicles (Recycling)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he last met representatives of the Society of Motor Manufacturers and Traders to discuss progress made in promoting the recyclability of motor vehicles.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 27 February 1992]: My right hon. Friend is due to meet shortly with representatives of the motor industry and others to discuss vehicle recycling issues.

DEFENCE

Underground Nuclear Explosions

Mr. Flynn To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library a copy of the paper on seismic monitoring by Professor Alan Douglas of his Department's verification centre at Blacknest, given to the seminar on the detection and recognition of underground nuclear explosions held at the Geological Society, London, on 14 February.

Mr Archie Hamilton: I have arranged for a pre-publication copy of the paper given by Professor Alan Douglas at the Geological Society on 14 February to be placed in the Library. This copy consists of the illustrations presented together with an explanatory commentary. A more comprehensive version of the paper is to be published, by the Royal Astronomical Society, in the symposium proceedings which will be available later in the year. When the published proceedings are available a copy will be placed in the Library.

Low Flying

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will provide the statistical results of the monitoring of low flying by (a) covert deployments of RAF police and (b) Skyguard radars by year, for the last five years.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Covert deployments of RAF police, including those using the Skyguard radar system, have shown the consistent respect of aircrew for the low-flying regulations. It is not our practice to comment on the detailed findings of these surveys.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of the 22 January, Official Report, columns 236-37, if he can yet give the figures for the month of December 1991 in respect of listing the numbers of low-flying sorties by aircraft type.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The number of low-flying sorties by aircraft type carried out in the United Kingdom for December 1991 is:

Low-flying sorties by aircraft type

Aircraft type	December 1991
Buccaneer	59
F-4	33
Harrier	383
Hawk	819
Jaguar	251
Jet Provost	213
Tornado	1,170
Tucano	181
A-10	300
F-111	375
Other aircraft (including helicopters)	2,624
Total sorties	6,408

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the instances of breaches of low-flying regulations since 1988 which led to formal disciplinary action or courts martial under the terms of the Army Act 1955, Air Force Act 1955 or Naval Discipline Act 1957; and if he will list, for each case, the date, location and circumstances of the offence, the type of aircraft involved, the nature of the charge and the outcome of the proceedings.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Breaches of low-flying regulations that lead to proceedingss under the services disciplinary Acts are not recorded centrally.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the baseline year from which the expected reduction of 30 per cent. in jet low-flying over the United Kingdom, announced last October, was calculated.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: 1988.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy on the maintenance of a fixed list of simulated targets for toss-and-dive attack in the United Kingdom low-flying system.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: A review of the usefulness of the simulated toss and dive attack target list concluded that although of limited value, the list continues to meet certain needs of a number of flying training units. It has therefore been retained, but will remain under review as part of the continuing monitoring of the United Kingdom low-flying system.

DESO Office, Jakarta

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the main responsibilities of the Defence Export Services Organisation office in Jakarta; how many staff it employs; and what is the cost of running the office since it was established.

Mr. Alan Clark: The DESO office in Jakarta is responsible for providing local assistance and advice to United Kingdom defence companies seeking to market and sell equipment and services to the Indonesian armed forces. The office has three staff. Its estimated running cost is £73,200 per annum.

Territorial Army

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he is taking to encourage a new pool of recruits for the Territorial Army; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As part of the restructuring of the Territorial Army, arrangements are being made to establish a recruits pool by 1 April 1995 with the aim of permitting greater flexibility in the future management of TA manpower. At the same time, we will continue to mount publicity and recruiting campaigns to attract the volunteers needed to ensure that the TA in the future is fully manned.

Royal Navy

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the operational strengths of the Royal Navy and of other former South-East Asia Treaty Organisation countries.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Royal Navy currently has three aircraft carriers, an escort fleet which is reducing to around 40 destroyers and frigates, two assault ships and other specialist amphibious shipping, and a substantial flotilla of smaller warships including mine countermeasures vessels and offshore patrol vessels. In addition to the four Polaris boats, we currently have fifteen nuclear-powered submarines and six diesel electric submarines. It is not our policy to comment on the strengths of other countries' armed forces.

Services Properties

Sir Peter Hordern: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many properties for service men are at present unoccupied; and how many have been unoccupied for more than one year.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As at 31 December 1991, the latest date for which figures are available, 9,817 service married quarters were vacant and 2,161 of these, representing 3 per cent. of our total stock, had been vacant for more than one year. Many of these 9,817 vacant properties were either undergoing or awaiting major maintenance work or modernisation, some were already allotted to service families who were due to move in shortly and others were being considered for disposal. In addition, 1,560 dwellings were in the process of being sold.

Departmental Staff

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish a table showing the number of (a) men and (b) women in his Department in each of grades (i) 1, (ii) 2, (iii) 3, (iv) 4, (v) 5, (vi) 6, (vii) 7, (viii) SEO, (ix) HEO, (x) administrative trainee, (xi) EO, (xii) CO and (xiii) CA.

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give details of the number of civilian employees at RAF Lossiemouth, RAF Kinloss, RAF Leuchars, RN Bases Coulport, Faslane and Rosyth, and Royal Marine Base Condor.

Mr. Alan Clark: It is not our policy to divulge the number of employees at individual MOD establishments.

Disarmament Proposals

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what issues will be discussed at the next planning meeting of the group of scientific experts on technical test—GSETT-2—of the United Nations committee on disarmament in Geneva in March; and what proposals United Kingdom representatives will make to the meeting.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The next meeting of the UN conference on disarmament ad hoc group of scientific experts' is to be held in Geneva between 2 and 13 March. The main subject for discussion at the meeting will be the preparation of the final report on the results of the group of scientific experts (GSE) technical test 2 for submission to the conference on disarmament. The United Kingdom will participate in the discussions aimed at achieving a consensus report. In addition, a technical working paper summarising local seismic information and aimed at improving the definition of United Kingdom seismic sources will be tabled. It is hoped this will stimulate other GSE participants to publish similar information for application to small seismic sources which occur within their national boundaries.

Defence Expenditure

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his oral answer of 4 February, Official Report, column 119, to the hon. Member for Rhondda, (Mr. Rogers), over what time period the 25,000 redundancies occurred; whether the jobs lost were directly or indirectly dependent on defence expenditure; whether the jobs lost were dependent on equipment expenditure, non-equipment expenditure or exports; in which regions these job losses have occurred; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: The source of the figure quoted was public announcements by major defence companies since 1990. Employment levels are a matter for the commercial judgment of the companies concerned, and my Department does not hold the further information that the hon. Gentleman requests.

Polaris and Trident

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will now make it his policy to answer questions about the repair and maintenance programme of the (a) Polaris and (b) Trident fleets.

Mr. Alan Clark: All such questions will be, and have been, given answers subject only to commercial confidentiality and security constraints.

Long-term Costings

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the financial implications that result from his policy regarding the release of information on long-term costings.

Mr. Alan Clark: I have nothing to add to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minister of State for the Armed Forces on 7 February 1992.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the implications for the British defence industry of his policy regarding the release of information on long-term costings.

Mr. Alan Clark: No such assessment has been made, nor would be appropriate, as "Long Term Costing" is an internal planning document. The implications of our expenditure plans are discussed regularly with industry.

Yugoslavia

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the implications for "Options for Change" of the deployment of British service personnel with a United Nations peacekeeping force in Yugoslavia.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We are still discussing with the United Nations what form a United Kingdom contribution to the peacekeeping operation in Yugoslavia might take. In selecting what British assets might be offered to the United Nations for this operation, the Government have taken account of its policy "Britain's Defence for the 90s".

Environmental Manual

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many copies of the departmental environmental manual have been (a) printed and (b) distributed to staff; and how many copies of the proposed booklet on public access to the defence estate will be published for issue to the public.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Of an initial print run of 10,000 copies of the Ministry of Defence environmental manual some 8,400 copies have already been distributed. An additional 10,000 copies have been printed for further distribution and stock purposes. There will be an initial print of 2,000 copies of the leaflet "Walks on Ministry of Defence land" to coincide with its planned launch in early March. Current plans envisage a final run print of up to 100,000 copies of the leaflet for distribution to the public.

Defence Budget

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 7 February, Official Report, column 329, on the defence budget, on how many occasions in each of the last six months he has made available information on plans for, and progress of, individual projects.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My Department makes available information on the plans and progress of projects in a wide variety of ways. These include parliamentary statements, debates and questions; the Statement of the Defence Estimates; press releases and briefings; and discussions with industry and trades union which range from the major conferences held by the Procurement Executive controllers to contacts in the normal course of business. It would not be feasible to list the information made available through these means in the last six months.

Financial Planning and Management Group

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 7 February, Official Report, column 330, when the Financial Planning and Management Group was established; and what work it has carried out since its establishment.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Financial Management Group was established at the end of 1977. Its role is to oversee the Ministry of Defence's financial and management process and to make recommendations as necessary to the Secretary of State.

Budget Holders

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 7 February, Official Report, columns 329-30, if he will publish the estimated future expenditure for higher level budget holders in each year for the next 10 years.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: This information is derived from the long-term costing. As explained by my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Defence Procurement in his answer of 2 May last year, Official Report, column 294, it is not our practice to provide such details.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the names of all the higher level budget holders.

Married Quarters Estate

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will make a statement on his reasons for proposing the transfer of the ownership and management of the married quarters estate to a new organisation;

(2) if he will describe the size and structure of the new organisation that is due to take over the ownership and management of the married quarters estate; who will staff it; when it will be established; what type of performance monitoring it will employ; how it will be financed; and if he will make a statement.

Friend the Member for Fulham (Mr. Carrington) on 24 February at column 395. The recommendation of the housing task force that a new, non-profit making organisation should take over from the MOD the ownership and management of the married quarters estate for all three services is being considered in detail by my Department. INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 204

SESSION 1991–92

17th February—28th February 1992

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc, between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes and cannot therefore, be used in connection with the daily part or weekly Hansard. For these versions use the Fortnightly Index.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instrument etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Mr. Speaker and his deputies are brought together under the heading Speaker's rulings and statements.

Other contributions by Mr. Speaker and his deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates, Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates etc (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.
